And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.

ELA'TE. adj. [elatus, Lat.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate!

I, of mind elate, and scorning fear,
Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear. Pope's Odyssey.

TO ELATE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.

2. To exult; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

ELATERIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An inspissated juice, light, of a friable texture and an acid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of a wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

ELA'TION. n. f. [from elate.] Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.

ELBOW. n. f. [elboga, Saxon.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.

2. Any flexure or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Strait will he come;
Wear thy good rapier beare, and put it home;
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow. Shakspeare's Othello.

ELBOWCHAIR. n. f. [elbow and chair.]

A chair with arms to support the elbows. Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

ELBOWROOM. n. f. [elbow and room.]

Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;
It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shakspeare.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adventures also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.

TO ELBOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one jostles in the shore. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. To push; to drive to a distance; to encroach upon.

It thrusts and stretches out,
And elbows all the kingdoms round about. Dryden.

ELD

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes, He'll make mad work and elbow out his neighbours. Dryden.

To ELBOW. v. n. To jut out in angles.
ELD. n. f. [eald, Saxon; eld, Scottish.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld.
Spenser.

Thy blazed youth
Becomes assuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shakespeare.

He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If likewise he some fair one wedded not,
Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld.
Milton.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld.
Chapman.

ELDER. n. f. [ellara, Saxon; sambucus.]
A tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. Miller.

Look for thy reward
Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit.
Shakespeare.

ELDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to old. [eald, ealdor, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; survivor;
having the privileges of primogeniture:
opposed to younger.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters. Hooker.

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways the level in her husband's heart. Shaksf.
How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter
Before I have a husband for the elder.
Shakespeare.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so were they called, elder men. Raleigh's History.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them. Temple.
Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile; not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

ELDERLY. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age.

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am giddy. Swift.

ELDERS. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. I Tim.

Our elders say,
The barren, touch'd in this holy chafe,
Shake off their sterile curse. Shakespeare.

The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elders rose.
Sandys.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, if it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you. L'Estrange.

I loose my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
Those fools demand not pardon, but applause.
Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

ELE

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders. Spenser's State of Ireland.

At the board, and in private, it very well be-cometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana; like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen ride
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.
Cleveland.

ELDERSHIP. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.

That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden.

Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause.
Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Erasmus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity. Hooker.

ELDEST. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [eald, ealdor, ealdrte, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shaksf. Macbeth.
The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space.
Dryden.

2. That has lived most years.

Eldest parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

ELECAMPANE. n. f. [helenium, Latin.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying ele- campane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill.

To ELECT. v. a. [electus, Latin.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king though young;
And Lewis of France, *elect*d first beguill'd.
Daniel.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, *elect*d a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

ELECT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembl'd
To plead your cause. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.
The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and

ELE

then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object
of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton.

ELECTION. n. f. [electio, Latin.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would chuse the meetest? Whitgift.

Him, not thy election,
But natural necessity, begot. Milton.

As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Spratt.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and chusing will!

Now if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still.
Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuse. Rogers.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things:
which so cleareth mens judgment and election, as it is the less apt to slide into error. Bacon.

In favour, to use men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious.
Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remiss in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places.
King Charles.

Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Addison.

ELECTIVE. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unsuited for action abroad.
Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will.
Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

ELECTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern.
Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Grew.

ELECTOR. n. f. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the brib'd electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperor.

ELECTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELECTORATE. n. s. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Adulson's Freeholder.

ELECTRE. n. s. [electrum, Latin.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electric.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELECTRICAL. } adj. [from electrum.]
ELECTRICK. } See ELECTRE.

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown.

An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electric body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electric body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wonderful what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light. Newton's Opticks.

ELECTRICITY. n. s. [from electric. See

ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELECTUARY. n. s. [electarium, Calius Aurel. which is now written electuary.]

A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey.

Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEEMOSYNARY. adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an eleemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself. Glanville's Sceptis.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

ELEGANCE. } n. s. [elegantia, Latin.]
ELEGANCY. }

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spektor.

ELEGANT. adj. [elegans, Latin.]

1. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him. Pope.
There may'st thou find some elegant retreat. London.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour, elegant with ease. Pope.

ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.

In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake. Roscommon.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententious. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period; there must be proper distances and pauses. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

ELEGIACK. adj. [elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Used in elegies.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay.

ELEGY. n. s. [elegus, Latin.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

ELEMENT. n. s. [elementum, Latin.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have. Hooker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles. Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me. Shakspeare.

My dearest sister fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort. Shakspeare.

The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shakspeare, King Lear.

The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here be four of you, able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element. Shakspeare.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent. Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
—One sure that promises no element
In such a business. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners. Hooker.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master. Dryden.

TO ELEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question. Boyle.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull sublunary, lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour shew;
That fullen mixture shall at once declare Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war. Dryden's Virgil.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, no properly, that is by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

ELEMENTARITY. n. f. [from elementary.] The simplicity of nature, or absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown.

ELEMENTARY. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Arbuthnot.

2. Initial; rude.

ELEMI. n. f.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Ethiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brazilians wound, and collect the resin. Hill's Mat. Med.

ELENCH. n. f. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us. Decay of Piety.

ELEOTS. n. f. Some name the apples in request in the cider countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ELEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Latin.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,

That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes. Shakspeare.

The elephant bath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakspeare.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold. Dryden's Virgil.

ELEPHANTIASIS. n. f. [elephantiasis, Latin.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHANTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

TO ELEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raise up aloft.

This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyfs. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milton.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vitious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

ELEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVATION. n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul, and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His stile was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown.

ELEVATOR. n. f. [from elevate.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chirurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELEVEN. adj. [ændlefen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakspeare.

ELEVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History.

ELF. n. f. plural elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shakspeare

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

The king of elves and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green, Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;
And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden.
However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

TO ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hammer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakspeare.

ELFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser.

ELFLOCK. n. f. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakspeare.

TO ELICITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He elicits those acts out of the meer laps'd state of human nature. Chryse.

ELICIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hume.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. Saunders.

ELICITATION. n. f. [from elicio, Latin.] That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramhall.

TO ELIDE. v. a. [elido, Latin.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hooker.

ELIGIBILITY. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes's Sermon.

ELIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison's Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clarissa.

ELIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINATION. n. f. [elimino, Latin.]
The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dict.

ELISION. n. f. [eliso, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off: as, can't the attempt, there is an elision of a syllable.
You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene. Saunders.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon.

ELIXATION. n. f. [elixus, Latin.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliments, and its elixation in the stomach. Brown.

ELIXIR. n. f. [Arabic.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture.

Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,

When cordials and elixirs fail'd,

On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,

Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,

But glorifies his pregnant pot,

If by the way to him befall

Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here

Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Par. Lost.

ELK. n. f. [ælc, Saxon.] A large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth.

The colour of its coat in winter is greyish, in summer it is paler. The horns of the male are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, scarce his head

Rais'd o'er the heavy wreath, the branching elk

Lies slumb'ring silent in the white abyss. Thomson.

ELL. n. f. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells

to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;

Look not on pleasures as they come; but go:

Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span

Makes not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLIPSIS. n. f. [ἑλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetoric, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins' Dædalus.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentric. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL. } adj. [from ellipsis.] Hav-ELLIPTICK. } ing the form of an ellip- sis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

1. A tree.

The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows, upon the borders of the fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit trees: because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,

Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,

Invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,

In early spring, his airy city builds. Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,

Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,

Makes me with thy strength to communicate. Shakspeare.

ELOCUTION. n. f. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whose taste, too long forborne, at first essay

Gave elocution to the mute, and taught

The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise. Milton.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

E'LOGY. n. f. [elogé, French.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

To E'LOIGNE. v. a. [eloigner, French.]

To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From worldly care himself he did eloin,

And greatly shunned manly exercise. F. Queen.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do

To anger destiny, as she doth us;

How I shall stay though she elaigne me thus,

And how posterity shall know it too. Donne.

To E'LONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

To E'LONGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the south point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the west; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward. Brown.

ELONGATION. n. f. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wise's Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville's Scepsis.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent or elongation. Brown.

To E'LOPE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dut.]

To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politic, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison.

What from the dame can Paris hope?

She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter, For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

E'LOPEMENT. n. f. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbuthnot.

ELS

E'LOPS. n. f. [ἑλως.] A fish: reckoned however by Milton among the serpents. Scorpion and asp, and amphibena dire, Ceraftes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear, And dipfas. Milton's Par. Lost.

E'LOQUENCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence

Flourish'd, since mute. Milton.

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,

And speaks with all the eloquence of tears. Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say the be mute, and will not speak a word;

Then I'll commend her volubility,

And say she uttered piercing eloquence. Shaksp.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,

And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Isaiah.

Oh death! all eloquent, you only prove

What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

ELSE. pronoun. [eller, Saxon.] Other;

one beside: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him. Shaksp.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom. Hale.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you;

He did it when he had nothing else to do. Denham.

ELSE. adv.

1. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life,

Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,

But stand aloof, and think profane to view:

This faulchion, else, not hitherto withstood,

These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood. Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be asured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us

must be attributed to some cause? Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,

And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superflu-

ously.

Be more abstemious,

Or else good night your vow. Shakspere.

E'LSEWHERE. adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or

Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere

he knew not. Raleigh's History.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,

Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,

And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice

Shall be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere. Milton.

Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not. Graunt.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand. Hooker.

ELU

Let us no more contend, nor blame

Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere. Milton.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;

My mother's daughter knows not how to fear. Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no

new or strange thing. Tillotson.

To ELUCIDATE. v. a. [elucido, Latin.]

To explain; to clear; to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it. Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TION. n. f. [from elucidate.]

Explanation; exposition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment. Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TOR. n. f. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expofitor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pe-dantical elucidators. Abbot.

To ELUDE. v. a. [eludo, Latin.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented. Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint. Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,

Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;

But feigns a laugh to see me search around,

And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

ELU'DIBLE. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more insisted on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast. Swift.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Fairy elves

Whose midnight revels by some forest side,

Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,

Or dreams he sees. Milton.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;

Fays, fairies, genii, elves and demons hear. Pope.

E'LVELOCK. n. f. [from elves and lock.]

Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

E'LVISH. adj. [from elves, the plural of

elf: it had been written more properly

elfish.] Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rioting hog!

The slave of nature, and the son of hell! Shak.

No muse hath been so bold,

Or of the latter or the old,

Those elvish secrets to unfold,

Which lie from others reading. Drayton.

ELU'MBATED. adj. [elumbis, Lat.] Weakened in the loins. Diä.

ELU'SION. n. f. [elusio, Lat.] An escape from inquiry or examination; a fraud;

an artifice.

An appendix, relating to the transmutation of metals, detects the impostures and elusions of those who have pretended to it. Woodward.

ELU'SIVE. adj. [from elude.] Practising elusion; using arts to escape.

EMA

Elusive of the bridal day, she gives Fond hopes to all, and all with hopes deceives. Pope.

ELU'SORY. adj. [from elude.] Tending to elude; tending to deceive; fraudulent; deceitful; fallacious.

It may be feared they are but Parthian flights, ambuscade retreats and elusory tergiversation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ELUTE. v. a. [eluo, Latin.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more peccati-ous; because it is harder to be eluted by the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

To ELU'TRIATE. v. a. [elutrio, Latin.]

To decant; or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs. Arbutnot on Air.

ELYSIAN. adj. [elysius, Latin.] Pertaining to elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,

Rolls o'er elysian flowers her amber stream. Milton.

ELYSIUM. n. f. [Latin.] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls;

any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth,

So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,

Or I should breathe it so into thy body,

And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium. Shakspere.

'EM. A contraction of them.

For he could coin and counterfeit

New words with little or no wit;

And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,

The ignorant for current took 'em. Hudibras.

To EMA'CIATE. v. a. [emacio, Lat.]

To waste; to deprive of flesh.

Men after long emaciating diets wax plump,

fat, and almost new. Bacon.

All dying of the consumption, die emaciated and lean. Graunt.

To EMA'CIATE. v. n. To lose flesh; to pine; to grow lean.

He emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of the sea's reciprocation, although not drowned therein. Brown.

EMACIA'TION. n. f. [emaciatum, Latin.]

1. The act of making lean.

2. The state of one grown lean.

Searchers cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanness were from a phthisis, or from a hectic fever. Graunt.

EMACULA'TION. n. f. [emaculo, Latin.]

The act of freeing any thing from spots or foulness. Diä.

E'MANANT. adj. [emanans, Lat.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world, and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of almighty God terminate in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence. Hale.

To E'MANATE. v. n. [emano, Latin.] To issue or flow from something else.

EMANA'TION. n. f. [emanatio, Latin.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the sun. South.

2. That which issues from another substance; an efflux; effluvium.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are, the first motive of our love. Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrups, oils, and viscosities, which spun, at length, retire into their former dimensions. Brown.

Such were the features of her heav'nly face; Her limbs were form'd with such harmonious grace;

So faultless was the frame, as if the whole Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryden.

The letters, every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanations of the heart. Pope.

Each emanation of his fires That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires; Each art he prompts, each charm he can create; Whate'er he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope.

EMA'NATIVE. adj. [from emano, Latin.] Issuing from another. Diſt.

To EMA'NCIPATE. v. a. [emancipo, Latin.] To set free from servitude; to restore to liberty.

Having received the probable inducements of truth, we become emancipated from testimonial engagements. Brown.

By the twelve tables, only those were called unto the intestate succession of their parents that were in the parents power, excluded all emancipated children. Ayliffe's Parergon.

They emancipated themselves from dependence. Arbuthnot.

EMANCIPA'TION. n. f. [from emancipate.] The act of setting free; deliverance from slavery.

Obstinacy in opinions holds the dogmatist in the chains of error, without hope of emancipation. Glanville's Scepſis.

To EMA'RGINATE. v. a. [margo, Latin.] To take away the margin or edge of any thing. Diſt.

To EMA'SCULATE. v. a. [emasculo, Lat.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of virility.

When it is found how many ewes, suppose twenty, one ram will serve, we may geld nineteen, or thereabouts; for if you emasculate but ten, you shall, by promiscuous copulation, hinder the increase. Graunt.

2. To effeminate; to weaken; to vitiate by unmanly softness.

From wars and from affairs of state abstain; Women emasculate a monarch's reign. Dryden.

Dangerous principles impose upon our understandings, emasculate our spirits, and spoil our temper. Collier.

EMASCU'LA'TION. n. f. [from emasculate.]

1. Castration.

2. Effeminacy; womanish qualities; unmanly softness.

To EMBA'LE. v. a. [emballer, French.]

1. To make up into a bundle.

2. To bind up; to enclose.

Below her ham her weed did somewhat train, And her straight legs most bravely were embal'd In golden buskins of costly cordwain. F. Queen.

To EMBA'LM. v. a. [embaumer, French; embalsamer, Spanish.] To impregnate a body with aromatics, that it may resist putrefaction.

Embalm me, Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakspeare.

I would shew future times What you were, and teach them t' urge towards such:

Verse embalms virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes,

Preserve frail transitory fame as much As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch. Donne.

Muse! at that name thy sacred sorrows shed; Those tears eternal that embalm the dead. Pope.

EMBA'LMER. n. f. [from embalm.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.

The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed. Bacon's Natural History.

To EMBA'R. v. a. [from bar.]

1. To shut; to enclose.

Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall, He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight; Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall, He has them now four years besieg'd to make them thrall. Spenser.

In form of airy members fair embar'd His spirits pure were subject to our fight. Fairf.

2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart unto Calais, he embared all further trade for the future. Bacon.

If this commerce 'twixt heav'n and earth were not

Embar'd, and all this traffick quite forgot, She, for whose loss we have lamented thus, Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us. Donne.

EMBARCA'TION. n. f. [from embark.]

1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarcation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet. Clarendon.

2. The act of going on shipboard.

EMBA'RGO. n. f. [embargar, Spanish.]

A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.

He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England, as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin. Bacon's Henry VII.

After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rheez. Wotton.

I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it. Dryden.

To EMBA'RK. v. a. [embarquer, French.]

EMBA'SSADDRESS. n. f. A woman sent on a publick message.

With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes, And to the bright embassadress replies. Garth.

E'MBASSAGE. } n. f. [It may be ob-E'MBASSY. } served, that though our authors write almost indiscriminately embassador or ambassador, embassage or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy, all concurring to write embassy.]

1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suits, Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter, Will I lend ear to. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

When he was at Newcastle he sent a solemn embassage unto James king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him. Bacon.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band He first commissions to the Latian land, In threat'ning embassy. Dryden's Aeneid.

2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees. Taylor.

3. An errand, in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies, that one might say, If a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made? Sidney.

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot, Doth not thy embassage belong to me; And am I last that know it? Shakspeare.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.

The English are embattled; To horse! you gallant princes, strait to horse! Shakspeare.

I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakspeare.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return, And overwhelm the war! Milton.

Embattl'd nations strive in vain The hero's glory to restrain: Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,

In vain against his force conspire. Prior.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle By the second hour of the morn. Shakspeare.

To EMBA'Y. v. a. [from baigner, to bathe, French.]

1. To bathe; to wet; to wash. Not used.

In her lap a little babe did play
His cruel sport;
For in her streaming blood he did embay
His little hands, and tender joints embrew.
Fairy Queen.

Every sense the humour sweet embay'd,
And, slumb'ring soft my heart did steal away.
Fairy Queen.

2. [from bay.] To enclose in a bay; to land lock.

If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inshelter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd.
Shakespeare.

To EMBE'LLISH. v. a. [embellir, Fr.]
To adorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been,

Embellish'd with her first created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryden.

The names of the figures that embellish'd the discourses of those that understood the art of speaking are not the art and skill of speaking well.
Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellish'd by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins.
Addison on Italy.

EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. f. [from embellish.]
Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; adscititious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of the legends of the Romish church.
Atterbury.

EMBERING. n. f. The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.

For causes good so many ways,
Keep emb'ring well, and fasting days;
What law commands we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday. Tupper.

EMBERS. n. f. without a singular [αἰμύρια, Saxon, ashes; einmyria, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopp'd, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He toft his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.
Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden's Virgil.

EMBERWEEK. n. f. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of Marschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Common Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called ember weeks.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

To EMBE'ZZLE. v. a. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbacile.]

1. To appropriate by breach of trust; to turn what is intrusted in his hands to his own use.

He had embezzled the king's treasure, and extorted money by way of loan from all men.
Hayward.

2. To waste; to swallow up in riot.

When thou hast embezzl'd all thy store,

EMBE'ZZLEMENT. n. f. [from embezzle.]

1. The act of appropriating to himself that which is received in trust for another.

2. The thing appropriated.

To EMBLA'ZE. v. a. [blasonner, French.]

1. To adorn with glittering embellishments.

Th' unsought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors. Pope.

2. To blazon; to paint with ensigns armorial.

Nor shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
T' emblaze the honour which thy master got.
Shakespeare.

He from the glittering staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign, streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblaz'd, Seraphick arms and trophies. Milton's Par. Lost.

To EMBLA'ZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To adorn with figures of heraldry; to grace with epigns armorial.

2. To deck in glaring colours; to set out pompously to show.

We find Augustus, for some petty conquest,
emblazoned by the poets to the highest pitch.
Hakerwill on Providence.

EMBLA'ZONRY. n. f. [from emblazon.]
Pictures upon shields.

Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd
With bright emblazonry and horrent arms. Milton.

EMBLEM. n. f. [ἔμβλημα.]

1. Inlay; enamel; any thing inserted into the body of another.

2. An occult representation; an allusive picture; a typical designation.

She had all the royal makings of a queen,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems, Laid nobly on her. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, shew a landscape of the country natural to the beast.

Peacham on Drawing.

Gentle Thames,
Thy mighty master's emblem, in whose face
Sate meekness, heighten'd with majestic grace.
Denham.

He is indeed a proper emblem of knowledge and action, being all head and paws. Addison.

To EMBLEM. v. a. [from the noun.]

To represent in an occult or allusive manner. Not used.

The primitive fight of elements doth fitly emblem that of opinions. Glanville's Scepis.

EMBLEMATICAL. } adj. [from emblem.]
EMBLEMATICK. }

1. Comprising an emblem; allusive; occultly representative.

In the well fram'd models,
With emblematick skill and mystick order,
Thou shew'dst where tow'rs on battlements
Should rise,

Where gates should open, or where walls should compass.
Prior.

The poets contribute to the explication of reverses purely emblematical, or when the persons are allegorical. Addison.

2. Dealing in emblems; using emblems.

By tongue and pudding to our friends explain
What does your emblematick worship mean. Prior.

EMBLEMATICALLY. adv. [from emblematical.] In the manner of emblems; allusively; with occult representation.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as to the Egyptians; and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown.

He took a great stone, and put it up under the oak, emblematically joining the two great elements of masonry. Swift.

EMBLEMATIST. n. f. [from emblem.] A writer or inventor of emblems.

These fables are still maintained by symbolical writers, emblematis, and heralds. Brown.

EMBOISM. n. f. [ἔμβολισμός.]

1. Intercalation; insertion of day or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were often different manner in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out emboisms or equations, even to the addition of whole months, to make all as even as they could. Holder.

2. The time inserted; intercalatory time.

EMBOIUS. n. f. [ἔμβολος.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our members make a sort of an hydraulick engine, in which a chemical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels by an emboius, like the heart. Arbuthnot.

To EMBO'SS. v. a. [from bossé, a protuberance, French.]

1. To form with protuberances; to cover with something rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood?
Which once a-day, with his embofied froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakespeare.

Thou art a bile,
A plague sore, or embofied carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. Shakespeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh embofs,
And all his people. Milton's Par. Lost.

All croud in heaps, as at a night-alarm
The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' embofs their hives in clusters. Dryden.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.

Then o'er the lofty gate his art embofs'd
Androgeo's death, and off' rings to his ghost.
Dryden's Virgil.

3. [from emboïsser, French, to enclose in a box.] To enclose; to include; to cover.

The knight his thrillant spear again assay'd
In his brail-plated body to embofs. Spenser.

And in the way, as she did weep and wail,
A knight her met, in mighty arms embofs'd.
Fairy Queen.

4. [embofsare, Italian.] To enclose in a thicket.

Like that self-begotten bird
In th' Arabian woods embofs. Milton's Agonistics.

5. To hunt hard.

When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embofs: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embofs, from bossé, French, a tumour. Hammer.

- Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Theffaly
Was never so emboss. Shakspeare.
We have almost emboss him: you shall see his fall to-night. Shakspeare.
- EMBO'SSMENT. n. f. [from emboss.]
1. Any thing standing out from the rest;
jut; eminence.
I wish also in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments.
Bacon.
2. Relief; rising work.
They are at a loss about the word pendentis;
some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo. Addison on Italy.
- To EMBO'TTLE. v. a. [bouteille, French.]
To include in bottles; to bottle.
Stirrom, firmest fruit
Embottled long as Priamean Troy Withstood the Greeks, endures. Philips.
- To EMBO'WEL. v. a. [from bowel.] To eviscerate; to deprive of the entrails;
to extenterate.
The schools,
Embowelled of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself. Shakspeare.
Embowelled will I see thee by and by;
'Till then, in blood, by noble Percy lye.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.
- The roar
Embowell'd with outrageous noise the air,
And all her entrails tore. Milton's Par. Lost.
Fossils and minerals that th' embowell'd earth Displays. Philips.
- To EMBRA'CE. v. a. [embrasser, Fr.]
1. To hold fondly in the arms; to squeeze in kindness.
Embrace again, my sons! be foes no more;
Nor stain your country with her children's gore.
Dryden.
2. To seize ardently or eagerly; to lay hold on; to welcome; to accept willingly any thing offered.
I take it, your own business calls on you,
And you embrace th' occasion to depart.
Shakspeare.
- At first, her mother earth she holdeth dear,
And doth embrace the world, and worldly things.
Davies.
- They who are represented by the wise virgins, embraced the profession of the christian religion,
as the foolish virgins also had done. Tillotson.
3. To comprehend; to take in: as, natural philosophy embraces many sciences.
4. To comprise; to enclose; to contain;
to encompass; to encircle.
Low at his feet a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd.
Denham.
5. To admit; to receive.
Fenton, Heav'n give thee joy!
What cannot be eschew'd, must be embraced.
Shakspeare
- If a man can be assured of any thing, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.
6. To find; to take.
Fleance, his son,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
7. To squeeze in a hostile manner.
To EMBRA'CE. v. n. To join in an embrace.
Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
And wander we to see thy honest son,
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous.
Shakspeare.
- EMBRA'CE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Clasp; fond pressure in the arms; hug.

- Thames, the most lov'd of all the ocean's fons
By his old fire, to his embraces runs. Denham.
2. A hostile squeeze; crush.
EMBRA'CEMENT. n. f. [from embrace.]
1. Clasp in the arms; hug; embrace.
Thus death becomes a rival to us all,
And hopes, with foul embracements her to get,
In whose decay virtue's fair shrine must fall.
Sidney.
- There cherishing one another with dear, though chaste embracements, with sweet, though cold kisses, it might seem that love was come to play him there without darts. Sidney.
2. Hostile hug; grapple.
These beasts, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet; and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement.
Sidney.
3. Comprehension.
Nor can her wide embracements filled be.
Davies.
4. State of being contained; enclosure.
The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood, and flesh, die in the embracements of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon's Natural History.
5. Conjugal endearment.
I would freelier rejoice in that absence, wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakspeare.
- EMBRA'CE. n. f. [from embrace.] The person embracing.
Yet are they the greatest embracers of pleasure of any other upon earth; and they esteem of pearls as pebbles, so they may satisfy their gust, in point of pleasure or revenge. Howel.
- EMBRA'SURE. n. f. [embrasure, French.]
An aperture in the wall, through which the cannon is pointed; battlement.
- To EMBRA'VE. v. a. [from brave.] To decorate; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to adorn. Not now in use.
So, both agree their bodies to engrave;
The great earth's womb they open to the sky,
And, with sad cypress, seemly it embrace.
Fairy Queen
- To EMBROCATE. v. a. [ἐμβρέχειν.]
To rub any part diseased with medicinal liquors.
I returned her a glass with oil of roses and vinegar, to embrocate her arm. Wifeman.
- EMBROCA'TION. n. f. [from embrocate.]
1. The act of rubbing any part diseased with medicinal liquors or spirits.
2. The lotion with which any diseased part is washed or embrocated.
We endeavoured to ease by discutient and emollient cataplasms, and embrocations of various sorts. Wifeman's Surgery.
- To EMBRO'IDER. v. a. [broder, Fr.]
To border with ornaments; to decorate with figured work; to diversify with needlework; to adorn a ground with raised figures of needlework.
Such an accumulation of favours is like a kind of embroidering, or lifting of one favour upon another. Wolton.
- Embroider'd so with flowers it had stood,
That it became a garden of a wood. Waller.
Let no virgin be allowed to receive her lover,
but in a suit of her own embroidering. Speck.
Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;
This slave the floor, and that the table spreads.
Pope.
- EMBRO'IDERER. n. f. [embroider.] One that adorns clothes with needlework.
Blue silk and purple, the work of the embroiderer. Eccles.
- EMBRO'IDERY. n. f. [from embroider.]

1. Figures raised upon a ground; variegated needlework.
Write,
In em'rald tufts, flow'rs purpled, blue and white,
Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee.
Shakspeare.
- Laces and embroideries are more costly than either warm or comely. Bacon.
- Next these a youthful train their vows express'd, With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery dress'd. Pope.
2. Variegation; diversity of colours.
If the natural embroidery of the meadows were help'd and improved by art, a man might make a pretty landscape of his own possessions. Spektor.
- To EMBRO'IL. v. a. [brouiller, French.]
1. To disturb; to confuse; to distract; to throw into commotion; to involve in troubles by dissension and discord.
I had no passion, design, or preparation to embroil my kingdom in a civil war. King Ch.
- Rumour next, and chance,
And tumult and confusion, all embroil'd,
And discord with a thousand various mouths.
Milton.
- When she found her venom spread so far,
The royal house embroil'd in civil war,
Rais'd on her dusky wings she cleaves the skies.
Dryden.
2. To perplex; to entangle.
The christian antiquities at Rome, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction.
Addison on Italy.
3. In the following passage the word seems improperly used for broil or burn.
That knowledge, for which we boldly attempt to rifle God's cabinet, should, like the coal from the altar, serve only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.
- To EMBRO'THEL. v. a. [brothel, brodel.]
To enclose in a brothel.
Men, which chuse
Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute,
Worse than embrothel'd strumpets prostitute.
Donne.
- EMBRYO. } n. f. [ἐμβρυον.]
EMBRYON. } n. f. [ἐμβρυον.]
1. The offspring yet unfinished in the womb.
The bringing forth of living creatures may be accelerated, if the embryo ripeneth and perfecteth sooner. Bacon.
- An exclusion before conformation, before the birth can bear the name of the parent, or be so much as properly called an embryo. Brown.
- The earth was form'd, but in the womb as yet
Of waters, embryo immature involv'd Appear'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- In that dark womb are the signs and rudiments of an embryo world. Burnet's Theory.
- When the crude embryo careful nature breeds,
See how she works, and how her work proceeds.
Blackmore.
- While the promis'd fruit
Lies yet a little embryo, unperceiv'd Within its crimson folds. Thomson's Spring.
2. The state of any thing yet not fit for production, or yet unfinished.
The company little suspected what a noble work I had then in embryo. Swift.
- EME. n. f. [eame, Saxon.] Uncle. Obsolete.
- Whilst they were young, Cassibelan their eme,
Was by the people chosen in their stead;
Who on him took the royal diadem,
And goodly well it long time governed. Spenser.
- EMENDABLE. adj. [emendo, Latin.] Capable of emendation; corrigible.
- EMENDATION. n. f. [emendo, Latin.]

1. Correction; alteration of any thing from worse to better.

The essence and the relation of any thing in being, is fitted, beyond any emendation, for its action and use; and shews it to proceed from a mind of the highest understanding. Grew.

2. An alteration made in the text by verbal criticism.

EMENDATOR. n. f. [emendo, Lat.] A corrector; an improver; an alterer for the better.

EMERALD. n. f. [emeraude, French; smaragdus, Lat.] A green precious stone.

The emerald is evidently the same with the ancient smaragdus; and, in its most perfect state, is perhaps the most beautiful of all the gems. The rough emerald is usually of a very bright and naturally polished surface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. The oriental emerald is of the hardness of the sapphire and ruby, and is second only to the diamond in lustre and brightness. Hill on Fossils.

Do you not see the grass how in colour they excel the emerald? Sidney.

The emerald is a bright grass green: it is found in fissures of rocks, along with copper ores. Woodward on Fossils.

Nor deeper verdure dies the robe of spring, When first she gives it to the southern gale, Than the green emerald shows. Thomson.

TO EMERGE. v. n. [emergeo, Latin.]

1. To rise out of any thing in which it is covered.

They emerged, to the upper part of the spirit of wine, as much of them as lay immersed in the spirit. Boyle.

I take the prosperous estate of this great emporium to be owing to those instances of charity. Atterbury.

To EMPOVERISH. v. a. [pauvre, Fr.]

1. To make poor; to depauperate; to reduce to indigence.

Since they might talk better as they lay together, they impoverished their cloaths to enrich their bed, which, for that night, might well scorn the shrine of Venus. Sidney.

Your's sounds aloud, and tells us you excel No less in courage than in singing well; While, unconcern'd, you let your country know, They have impoverish'd themselves, not you. Waller.

For sense of honour, if it impoverisheth a man, it is, in his esteem, neither honour nor sense. South.

Fresh roses bring,

To strow my bed, 'till the impoverish'd spring Confess her want. Prior.

2. To lessen fertility: as tillage impoverishes land.

EMPOVERISHER. n. s. [from impoverish.]

1. One that makes others poor.

2. That which impairs fertility.

They destroy the weeds and fit the land for aftercrops, being an improver, and not an impoverisher of land. Mortimer.

EMPOVERISHMENT. n. s. [from impoverish.] Depauperation; cause of poverty; drain of wealth.

Being paid as it is, now some, and then some, it is no great burden unto her, nor any great impoverishment to her coffers. Spenser.

All appeals for justice, or appellations for favour or preferment to another country, are so many grievous impoverishments. Swift.

VOL. I.

To EMPOWER. v. a. [from power.]

1. To authorize; to commission; to give power or authority to any purpose.

You are empowered, when you please, to give the final decision of wit. Dryd. Juv. Dedicat.

The government shall be empowered to grant commissions to all protestants whatsoever. Swift.

2. To give natural force; to enable.

Does not the same power that enables them to heal, empower them to destroy? Baker.

EMPRESS. n. s. [contracted from empress, which is retained by Jonson in the following lines.]

1. The queen of an emperour.

Let your nimble feet

Tread subtle circles, that may always meet

In point to him; and figures, to express

The grace of him, and his great empress. Ben Jonson.

2. A female invested with imperial dignity; a female sovereign.

Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve! Milton.

Yet, London, empress of the northern clime, By an high fate thou greatly didst expire. Dryden.

Wisdom, thou say'st, from heav'n receiv'd her birth;

Her beams transmitted to the subject earth:

Yet this great empress of the human soul,

Does only with imagin'd power controul,

If restless passion, by rebellious sway,

Compels the weak usurper to obey. Prior.

EMPRISE. n. s. [emprise, French.] Attempt of danger; undertaking of hazard; enterprise.

Noble minds, of yore, allied were In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. F. Queen.

A double conquest must you make, If you atchieve renown by this emprise. Fairfax.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars;

Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise. Milton.

Thus, till the sun had travell'd half the skies, Ambush'd we lie, and wait the bold emprise. Pope's Odyssey.

EMPTIER. n. s. [from empty.] One that empties; one that makes any place void by taking away what it contained.

The emptiers have emptied them out, and married their vine-branches. Nahum.

EMPTINESS. n. s. [from empty.]

1. Absence of plentitude; inanity.

Where cities stood,

Well fence'd, and numerous, desolation reigns

And emptiness; dismay'd, unfed, unhous'd,

The widow and the orphan stroll. Philips.

2. The state of being empty.

His coffers found

With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakspeare.

3. A void space; vacuity; vacuum.

Nor could another in your room have been,

Except an emptiness had come between. Dryden.

The ordinary air in which we live and respire, is of so thin a composition, that sixteen thousand one hundred and forty-nine parts of its dimensions are mere emptiness and nothing; and the remaining one only, material and real substance. Bentley.

4. Want of substance or solidity.

'Tis this which causes the graces and the loves to take up their habitations in the hardest marble and to subsist in the emptiness of light and shadow. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

5. Unsatisfactoriness; inability to fill up the desires.

O frail estate of human things,

Now to our cost your emptiness we know. Dryden.

Form the judgment about the worth or emptiness of things here, according as they are or are not of use, in relation to what is to come after. Atterbury.

6. Vacuity of head; want of knowledge.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray, As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.

EMPTION. n. s. [emptio, Latin.] The act of purchasing; a purchase.

There is a dispute among the lawyers, whether Glaucus his exchanging his golden armour with the brazen one of the Tydides, was emption or commutation. Arbuthnot on Coins.

EMPTY. adj. [æmtig, Saxon.]

1. Void; having nothing in it; not full.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakspeare.

The pit was empty, there was no water in it. Genesis.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that; there still remains one vessel empty. Burnet.

2. Evacuated; no longer full.

3. Devoid; unfurnished.

Art thou thus boldened, man, by thy distress, That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shaksp.

Mr. Boyle has shewed, that air may be rarified above ten thousand times in vessels of glass; and the heavens are much emptier of air than any vacuum we can make below. Newton.

4. Unsatisfactory; unable to fill the mind or desires.

Pleas'd in the silent shade with empty praise. Pope.

5. Without any thing to carry; unburdened; unfreighted.

They beat him, and sent him away empty. Matthew.

When ye go, ye shall not go empty. Exodus.

He alledges that satyrs carried platters full of fruit in their hands; but if they had been empty handed, had they been ever the larger satyrs? Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

Yet all the little that I got I spent;

And still return'd as empty as I went. Dryden.

6. Hungry.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty, And till the stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,

For then she never looks upon her lure. Shaksp.

7. Vacant of head; ignorant; unskilful; unfurnished with materials for thought.

How comes it that so many worthy and wise men depend upon so many unworthy and empty headed fools! Raleigh.

His answer is a handsome way of exposing an empty, trifling, pretending pedant; the wit lively, the satyr courtly and severe. Felton.

8. Unfruitful; barren.

Seven empty ears blasted with the east wind. Genesis.

Israel is an empty vine. Hosea.

9. Wanting substance; wanting solidity; vain.

The god of sleep there hides his heavy head,

And empty dreams on every leaf are spread. Dryden's Æneid.

To EMPTY. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To evacuate; to exhaust; to deprive of that which was contained in it.

Boundless intemperance,

In nature is a tyranny: it hath been

Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,

And fall of many kings. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The emptiers have emptied them out, and married their vine branches. Nahum.

Sheep are often blind by fulness of blood: cut their tails, and empty them of their blood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The Euxine sea is conveniently situated for trade, by the communication it has both with Asia and Europe, and the great navigable rivers that empty themselves into it. Arbuthnot.

EMP

To EMPURPLE. v. a. [from purple.] To make of a purple colour; to discolor with purple.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
Empurpled with celestial roses smil'd. Milton.
The deep,
Empurpled ran, with gushing gore distain'd. Philips.

To EMPURZZLE. v. a. [from puzzle.] To perplex; to put to a stand.

It hath empurzzled the enquiries of others to apprehend, and enforced them unto strange conceptions to make out. Brown.

EMPYE'MA. n. f. [ἐμπύημα.] A collection of purulent matter in any part whatsoever; generally used to signify that in the cavity of the breast only, and which sometimes happens upon the opening of abscesses, or ulcerations of the lungs, or membranes inclosing the breast. Quincy.

An empyema, or a collection of purulent matter in the breast, if not suddenly cured, doth undoubtedly impel the patient into a phthisical consumption. Harvey.

There is likewise a consumption from an empyema, after an inflammation of the lungs; which may be known from a weight upon the diaphragm, oppression of the lungs, a difficulty of breathing, and inability to lie on one side, which is that which is found. Arbuthnot.

EMPYREAL. adj. [ἐμπύρεος.] Formed of the element of fire; refined beyond aerial; pertaining to the highest and purest region of heaven. Tickel.

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in highest heav'n, array'd in gold
Empyrean. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Go, soar with Plato to th' empyrean sphere,
To the first good, first perfect, and first fair, Pope.

But empyrean forms, howe'er in sight
Gash'd and dismember'd easily unite. Tickel.

EMPYREAN. n. f. [ἐμπύρεος.] The highest heaven where the pure element of fire is supposed to subsist.

Almighty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean, where he sits High thron'd above all height, bent down his eye. Milton.

Under his burning wheel
The steadfast empyrean shook throughout,
All but the throne itself of God. Milton.
The empyrean rung
With hallelujahs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

EMPYREUM. } n. f. [ἐμπύρευμα.] The EMPYREUMA. } burning of any matter in boiling or distillation, which gives a particular offensive smell. Quincy.

It is so far from admitting an empyreum, that it burns clear away without leaving any cinders or ash about it. Harvey.

The hopes of an elixir insensibly evaporate, and vanish to air, or leave in the recipient a foul empyreuma. Decay of Piety.

EMPYREUMATICAL. adj. [from empyreuma.] Having the smell or taste of burnt substances.

Empyreumatical oils, distilled by strong fires in retorts, may be brought to emulate essential oils drawn in limicks. Boyle.

EMPYROSIS. n. f. [ἐμπύρωσις.] Conflagration; general fire.

The former opinion that held these cataclysms and empyroses universal, was such as held that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world, especially that of conflagration. Hale.

EMU

To EMULATE. v. a. [emulor, Latin.]

1. To rival; to propose as one to be equalled or excelled.

2. To imitate with hope of equality, or superiour excellence.

I would have Him emulate you: 'tis no shame to follow
The better precedent. Ben Jonson's Catiline.
Those fair ideas to my aid I'll call,
And emulate my great original. Dryden.

What though no weeping loves thy ashes grace,
Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face. Pope.

3. To be equal to; to rise to equality with.

I see how thy eye would emulate the diamond. Shakspeare.
We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

4. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.

It is likewise attended with a delirium, fury, and an involuntary laughter, the convulsion emulating this motion. Arbuthnot.

EMULATION. n. f. [emulatio, Latin.]

1. Rivalry; desire of superiority.

Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I'll pitch at him some way,
Or wrath or craft may get him. Shakspeare.
There was neither envy nor emulation amongst them. 1 Maccabees.

Aristotle allows that some emulation may be good, and may be found in some good men; yet envy he utterly condemns, as wicked in itself, and only to be found in wicked minds. Spratt.

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to an holy and general emulation of the charity of the Macedonians, in contributing freely to the relief of the poor saints at Jerusalem. South.

A noble emulation heats your breast,
And your own fame now robs you of your rest:
Good actions still must be maintain'd with good,
As bodies nourish'd with resembling food. Dryden.

2. Envy; desire of depressing another; contest; contention; discord.

What madness rules in brainsick men,
When for so slight and frivolous a cause,
Such factious emulations shall arise! Shakspeare.

EMULATIVE. adj. [from emulate.] Inclined to emulation; rivalling; disposed to competition.

EMULATOR. n. f. [from emulate.] A rival; a competitor.

In superiours it queneheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors and emulators asleep. Bacon.

To EMULE. v. a. [emulor, Latin.] To emulate. Not in use.

He sitting me beside, in that same shade,
Provok'd me to play some pleasant fit;
Yet emuling my pipe, he took in hand
My pipe, before that emuled of many,
And plaid thereon; for well that skill he could. Spenser.

To EMULGE. v. a. [emulgeo, Latin.] To milk out.

EMULGENT. adj. [emulgens, Latin.]

1. Milking or draining out.

2. Emulgent vessels [in anatomy] are the two large arteries and veins which arise, the former from the descending trunk of the aorta, or great artery; the latter from the vena cava. They are both inserted into the kidneys; the emulgent arteries carrying blood with the serum to them, and the emulgent veins bringing it back again, after the serum has been separated therefrom by the kidneys. Harris.

ENA

Through the emulgent branches the blood is brought to the kidneys, and is there freed of its serum. Cheyne.

EMULOUS. adj. [emulus, Latin.]

1. Rivalling; engaged in competition.

What the Gaul or Moor could not effect,
Nor emulous Carthage, with their length of spite,
Shall be the work of one. Ben Jonson.
She is in perpetual diffidence, or actual enmity with her, but always emulous and suspicious of her. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. Desirous of superiority; desirous to rise above another; desirous of any excellence possessed by another: with of before the object of emulation.

By strength
They measure all, of other excellence
Not emulous, nor care who them excels. Milton.
By fair rewards our noble youth we raise To emulous merit, and to thirst of praise. Prior.
Good Howard, emulous of the Grecian art. Prior.

3. Factious; contentious.

Whose glorious deeds, but in the fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakspeare.

EMULOUSLY. adv. [from emulous.] With desire of excelling or outdoing another.

So tempt they him, and emulously vie
To bribe a voice, that empires would not buy. Granville.

EMULSION. n. f. [emulsio, Latin.] A form of medicine, by bruising oily seeds and kernels, and drawing out their substances with some liquor, that thereby becomes milky.

The aliment is dissolved by an operation resembling that of making an emulsion; in which operation the oily parts of nuts and seeds, being gently ground in a marble mortar, and gradually mixed with some watery liquor, or dissolved into a sweet, thick, turbid, milky liquor, resembling the chyle in an animal body. Arbuthnot.

EMUNCTORIES. n. f. [emuntorium, Lat.]

Those parts of the body where any thing excrementitious is separated and collected, to be in readiness for ejection.

Superfluous matter deflows from the body under their proper emuntories. Brown.

There are receptacles in the body of man, and emuntories to drain them of superfluous choler. More against Atheism.

Discouring of the lungs, I shew that they are the grand emuntory of the body; that the main end of respiration is continually to discharge and expel an excrementitious fluid out of the mass of blood. Woodward's Nat. History.

The regimen in quinsies, which proceed from an obstruction of the glands, must be to use such warm liquors as relax those glands, such as, by stimulating, open the emuntories to secrete the humour. Arbuthnot.

EN. An inseparable particle borrowed by us from the French, and by the French formed from the Latin in. Many words are uncertainly written with en or in. In many words en is changed into em for more easy pronunciation.

To ENABLE. v. a. [from able.] To make able; to empower; to supply with strength or ability.

If thou would'st vouchsafe to overspread
Me with the shadow of thy gentle wing,
I should enabled be thy acts to sing. Spenser.
His great friendship with God might enable him, and his compassion might incline him. Atterbury.

He points out to him the way of life, strengthens his weakness, restores his lapses, and enables him to walk and persevere in it. Rogers.

To ENACT. v. a. [from act.]

1. To act; to perform; to effect. Not now in use.

In true balancing of justice, it is flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted. Spenser.

Valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.

Shakespeare.

2. To establish by law; to decree.

It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If it be proved against an alien

He seeks the life of any citizen,

The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods. Shakespeare.

The senate were authors of all counsels in the state; and what was by them consulted and agreed, was proposed to the people, by whom it was enacted or commanded. Temple.

3. To represent by action.

I did enact Hector.

Shakespeare.

ENACT. n. f. [from the verb.] Purpose; determination.

ENACTOR. n. f. [from enact.]

laws.

The great author of our nature, and enactor of this law of good and evil, is highly dishonoured.

Atterbury.

2. One that practises or performs any thing. Not used.

The violence of either grief or joy,

Their own enactors with themselves destroy.

Shakespeare.

ENALLAGE. n. f. [ἐναλλαγή.] A figure in grammar, whereby some change is made in the common modes of speech, as when one mood or tense of a verb is put for another.

To ENAMBUSH. v. a. [from ambush.]

To hide in ambush; to hide with hostile intention.

They went within a vale, close to a flood, whose stream

Us'd to give all their cattle drink, they there enambush'd them. Chapman's Iliad.

To ENAMEL. v. a. [from amel. See AMEL.]

1. To inlay; to variegate with colours, properly with colours fixed by fire.

Must I, alas!

Frame and enamel plate, and drink in glass?

Donne.

See Pan with flocks, with fruits Pomona
crown'd;

Here blushing Flora paints th' enamel'd ground.

Pope.

I bequeath to the Earl of Orrery the enamel'd silver plates, to distinguish bottles of wine by.

Swift's Last Will.

2. To lay upon another body so as to vary it.

Higher than that wall, a circling row
Of goodliest trees, laden with the fairest fruit,
Blossoms, and fruits at once of golden hue,
Appear'd with gay enamel'd colours mix'd.

Milton

ENAMEL. v. n. To practise the use of enamel.

Though it were foolish to colour or enamel upon the glasses of telescopes, yet to gild the tubes of them may render them more acceptable to the users, without lessening the clearness of the object.

Boyle.

ENAMEL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing enamelled, or variegated with colours fixed by fire.

Down from her eyes welled the pearles round,
Upon the bright enamel of her face;

Such honey drops on springing flowers are found,

When Phoebus holds the crimson morn in chase.

Fairfax.

There are various sorts of coloured glasses,
pastes, enamels, and factitious gems. Woolward

2. The substance inlaid in other things.

ENAMELLER. n. f. [from enamel.] One

To ENAMOUR. v. a. [amour, French.]

To inflame with love; to make fond;
with of before the thing or person loved.

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,

And thou art wedded to calamity. Shakespeare.

My Oberon! what visions have I seen!

I thought I was enamour'd of an ass. Shakespeare.

You are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero. Shakespeare.

Or should she, confident,

As fitting queen ador'd on beauty's throne,

Descend with all her winning charms begirt,

T' enamour, as the zone of Venus once

Brought that effect on Jove, so fables tell. Milton.

He, on his side,

Leaning half-raised, with looks of cordial love

Hung over her enamour'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Your uncle cardinal

Is not so far enamour'd of a cloyster,

But he will thank you for the crown. Dryden.

'Tis hard to discern whether is in the greatest error, he who is enamour'd of all he does, or he whom nothing of his own can please. Dryden.

Enauter his rage might cooled be,

But to the root bent his sturdy stroke. Spenser.

To ENCAGE. v. a. [from cage.] To shut up in a cage; to coop up; to confine.

He suffer'd his kinsman March,

Who is, if every owner were right plac'd,

Indeed, his king, to be encag'd in Wales,

There without ransom to lie forfeited. Shakespeare.

Like Bajazet encag'd, the shepherd's scott,

Or like slack-finew'd Sampson, his hair off.

Donne.

To ENCA'MP. v. n. [from camp.] To pitch tents; to sit down for a time in a march; to settle a temporary habitation.

He encamp'd at the mount of God. Exodus.

The French knew how to make war with the English, by not putting things to the hazard of a battle, but wearing them by long sieges of towns, and strong fortified encampings. Bacon.

To ENCA'MP. v. a. To form an army into a regular camp; to order to encamp.

The people were encamp'd against Gibbethon.

Kings.

Spread their encampment o'er the spacious plain,
Thick rising tents a canvas city build. Gay.

To ENCA'VE. v. a. [from cave.] To hide
as in a cave.

Do but encave yourself,

And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scoons,
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face;

For I will make him tell the tale anew. Shaksp.

ENCEINTE. n. f. [French.] Enclosure; ground enclosed with a fortification. A military term not yet naturalized.

To ENCHA'PE. v. a. [eschaffer, French.]

To enrage; to irritate; to provoke.

The wind-shak'd furge, with high and monstrous main,

Seems to cast water on the burning bear,

I never did like molestation view

On the enchafed flood. Shakespeare's Othello.

To ENCHA'IN. v. a. [enchaîner, French.]

1. To fasten with a chain; to hold in chains; to bind; to hold in bondage.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.

2. To link together; to concatenate.

The one contracts and enchains his words, speaking pressingly and short; the other delights in long-breathed accents. Hewel.

To ENCHA'NT. v. a. [enchanter, Fr.]

1. To give efficacy to any thing by songs of sorcery.

And now about the cauldron sing,

Like elves and fairies in a ring,

Enchanting all that you put in. Shakespeare.

These powerful drops thrice on the threshold pour,

And bathe with this enchanted juice her door;

That door where no admittance now is found,

But where my soul is ever hovering round.

Granville.

2. To subdue by charms or spells.

Arcadia was the charmed circle, where all his spirits for ever should be enchanted. Sidney.

John thinks them all enchanted: he enquires if Nick had not given them some intoxicating potion. Arbutnot.

3. To delight in a high degree.

One whom the musick of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish like enchanting harmony. Shaksp.

Too dear I priz'd a fair enchanting face;

Beauty unchaste, is beauty in disgrace. Pope.

ENCHA'NTER. n. f. [enchanter, French.]

A magician; a forcerer; one who has spirits or demons at his command; one who has the power of charms and spells.

Such phasms, such apparitions, are excellencies which men applaud in themselves, conjured up by the magick of a strong imagination, and only seen within that circle in which the enchanter stands. Decay of Piety.

Gladio, by valour and stratagem, put to death tyrants, enchanters, monsters, and knights.

Spectator.

Ardan, that black enchanter, whose dire arts
Enslav'd our knights, and broke our virgin hearts.

Granville.

ENCHA'NTINGLY. adv. [from enchant.]

With the force of enchantment. It is improperly used in a passive sense in the following passage.

He's gentle; never school'd, and yet learned;
full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly belov'd. Shakespeare.

ENCHA'NTMENT. n. f. [enchantement, Fr.]

There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republic, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clarendon.
I have lov'd!

What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.

Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.

Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison's Spect.

18. Thing intended; final design; the termination of intellectual prospect.

Wisdom may have framed one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased. Hooker.

All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them. Hooker.

Her only end is never-ending bliss;
Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
Who last of ends and first of causes is;
And to do this, she must eternal be. Davies.
The end of the commandment is charity. 1 Timothy.

Two things I shall propound to you, as ends; since the wise men of this world have made them theirs. Suckling.

Such conditions did fully comply with all those ends, for which the parliament had first taken up arms. Clarendon.

Hear and mark

To what end I have brought thee hither. Milton.
Life, with my Indamora, I would chuse;
But, losing her, the end of living lose. Dryden.
For when success a lover's toil attends,
Few ask if fraud or force attain'd his ends. Pope.
The end of our fast is to please God, and make him propitious. Smulridge.

19. An END. [Probably corrupted from on end.] Upright; erect: as, his hair stands an end.

20. An END has a signification in low language not easily explained; as, most an end, commonly: perhaps it is properly on end, at the conclusion; or corrupted from some old word not easily recoverable.
Stay'th though to vex me here?
Slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame! Shakspeare.

To END. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To terminate; to conclude; to finish.
They have ended all my harvest. Ruth.

Then ease your weary Trojans will attend,
And the long labours of your voyage end. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To die. [τελευτάω.]
Yet happy where my death, mine ending blest,
If this I could obtain, that breast to breast,
Thy bosom might receive my yielded spirit. Fairfax.

3. To terminate; to conclude.
Our laughing, if it be loud and high, commonly ends in a deep sigh; and all the instances of pleasure have a sting in the tail. Taylor.

4. To cease; to fail.
His sovereignty, built upon either of these titles, could not have descended to his heir, but must have ended with him. Locke.

5. To conclude action or discourse.
The angel ended, and in Adam's ear
So charming left his voice. Milton.

To ENDA'MAGE. v. a. [from damage.]

To mischief; to prejudice; to harm.
Nor ought he car'd whom he endamaged.
By tortous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

It cometh sometime to pass, that a thing unnecessary in itself doth notwithstanding appear convenient to be still held, even without use, left by reason of that coherence which it hath with somewhat most necessary, the removal of the one should endamage the other. Hooker.

Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endamage him. Shakspeare.

Gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms to endamage them. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

The trial hath endamaged thee no way;
Rather more honour left, and more esteem. Milton.

When an erroneous opinion is published, the publick is endamaged, and therefore it becomes punishable by the magistrate. South.

A great alteration doth seldom any wise endamage or disorder the globe. Woodward.

ENDA'MAGEMENT. n. s. [from endamage.]

The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,
Proves the just victim of his royal rage. Pope.

To ENGA'GE. v. n.

1. To conflict; to fight.

Upon advertisement of the Scots army, the earl of Holland was sent with a body to meet and engage with it. Clarendon.

2. To embark in any business; to enlist in any party.
'Tis not indeed my talent to engage In lofty trifles, or to swell my page
With wind and noise. Dryden's Persius.
- ENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from engage; engagement, French.]
1. The act of engaging, impawning, or making liable to a debt.
  2. Obligation by contract.
We have, in expence, exceeded our engagements. Atterbury.
  3. Adherence to a party or cause; partiality.
This practice may be obvious to any who impartially, and without engagement, is at the pains to examine. Swift.
  4. Employment of the attention.
Play; either by our too constant or too long engagement in it, becomes like an employment or profession. Rogers.
  5. Fight; conflict; battle. A word very poetical.
Our army, led by valiant Torrifmond,
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.
Encourag'd by despair, or obstinate
To fall like men in arms, some dare renew Feeble engagement, meeting glorious fate
On the firm land. Philips.
  6. Obligation; motive.
This is the greatest engagement not to forfeit an opportunity. Hammond.
- TO ENGAGE. v. a. [from gaol.] To imprison; to confine.
Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakspeare.
- TO ENGARRISON. v. a. [from garrison.] To protect by a garrison.
Neptune with a guard doth engarrison her strongly. Howel.
- TO ENGENDER. v. a. [from engender, Fr.]
1. To beget between different sexes.
This bastard love is engendered betwixt lust and idleness. Sidney.
  2. To produce; to form.
Oh nature! thou, who of the self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd, Engender'st the black toad and adder blue. Shakspeare's Timon.
Again, if souls do other souls beget,
'Tis by themselves, or by the body's pow'r:
If by themselves, what doth their working let,
But they might souls engender ev'ry hour? Davies.
  3. To excite; to cause; to produce.
Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies. Shakspeare.
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends. Shakspeare.
That engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth. Shakspeare.
It unloads the mind, engenders thoughts, and animates virtue. Addison.
  4. To bring forth.
Vice engenders shame, and folly broods o'er grief. Prior.
- TO ENGENDER. v. n. To be caused; to be produced.
Thick clouds are spread, and storms engender there. Dryden.
- ENGINE. n. f. [from engin, French; ingegno, Italian.]

1. Any mechanical complication, in which various movements and parts concur to one effect.
  2. A military machine.
This is our engine, towers that overthrows;
Our spear that hurts, our sword that wounds our foes. Fairfax.
  3. Any instrument.
The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible engines of death, will be well employed. Raleigh's Essays.
He takes the scissars, and extends
The little engine on his fingers ends. Pope.
  4. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.
  5. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect. Usually in an ill sense.
Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil, with all his engines so violently opposeth. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.
  6. An agent for another. In contempt.
They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.
- ENGINEER. n. f. [from ingenieur, French.] One who manages engines; one who directs the artillery of an army.
For 'tis the sport to have the engineer Hoist with his own petard. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Him thus enrag'd,
Descrying from afar, some engineer,
Dextrous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd,
By one nice shot, to terminate the war. Philips.
An author, who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenerous practice. Addison.
- ENGINEERY. n. f. [from engine.]
1. The act of managing artillery.
They may descend in mathematicks to fortification, architecture, engineery, or navigation. Milton on Education.
  2. Engines of war; artillery.
We saw the foe
Approaching, gross and huge, in hollow cube Training his devilish engineery. Milton.
- TO ENGIRD. v. a. [from gird.] To encircle; to surround; to environ; to encompass.
My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery;
For what's more miserable than discontent?
That gold must round engirt these brows of mine. Shakspeare.
- ENGLISH. adj. [from engler, Saxon.] Belonging to England; thence English is the language of England.
He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you may come into the court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. Shakspeare.
Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaiter, or parget; the finer, spoad. Woodward.
- TO ENGLISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To translate into English.
The hollow instrument terebra, we may english piercer. Bacon.
We find not a word in the text can properly be rendered anise, which is what the Latins call anethum, and properly englished dill. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- TO ENGLUT. v. a. [from engloutir, French.]
1. To swallow up. It is now little used in any sense.
Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general

- Take hold on me: for my particular grief
Engluts and swallows other sorrows. Shakspeare.
Certainly, thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutt'd. Shakspeare.
How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants
This night englutt'd! Shakspeare's Timon.
2. To fill.
Whole griev'd minds, which choler did englut,
Against themselves turning their wrathful spight. Spenser.
  3. To glut; to pamper.
Being once englutt'd with vanity, he will straightway loath all learning. Ascham.
- TO ENGO'RE. v. a. [from gore.] To pierce; to prick. Not used.
As savage bull, whom two fierce mastiffs bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore. Spenser.
- TO ENGO'RGE. v. a. [from gorge, Fr. a throat.] To swallow; to devour; to gorge.
Then fraught with rancour and engorged ire,
He cast at once him to avenge for all. Spenser.
That is the gulf of greediness, they say,
That deep engorgeth all this world is prey. Spenser.
- TO ENGO'RGE. v. n. To devour; to feed with eagerness and voracity; to riot.
Greedily she engorg'd without restraint,
And knew not eating death! Milton.
- TO ENGRA'IL. v. a. [from greile, French, hail.] To variegate; to spot as with hail. A word now used only in heraldry, for to indent in curve lines.
Æacides then shews
A long lance and a caldron, new engrail'd with twenty hues. Chapman's Iliads.
Polwheel beareth a faultier engrail'd. Carew.
- TO ENGRA'IN. v. a. [from grain.] To die deep; to die in grain.
See thou how fresh my flowers being spread,
Dyed in lillie white and crimson red,
With leaves engrain'd in lusty green. Spenser.
- TO ENGRA'PPLE. v. a. [from grapple.] To close with; to contend with hold on each other.
There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel.
- TO ENGRA'SP. v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.
Now 'gan Pyrocles wax as wood as he,
And him affronted with impatient might;
And both together fierce engrasped he,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their uncouth strife does see. Spenser.
- TO ENGRA'VE. v. a. preter. engraved; part. pass. engraved or engraven. [from engraver, French.]
1. To picture by incisions in any matter.
Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispread,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battles of his great godhead. Fairy Queen.
O'er all, the heav'n's refulgent image shines;
On either gate were six engraven signs. Addison.
Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renowned;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found. Pope.
  2. To mark wood or stone.
Engrave the two stones with the names. Exodus.
  3. To impress deeply; to imprint.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles, in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke

Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity. Atterbury.

Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die

In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye

Lives long upon the mind: the faithful sight Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhume; to inter.

The son had charge of them, now being dead, In seemly sort their corsets to engrave, And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed. Spenser.

ENGRAVER. n. f. [from engrave.] A cutter in stone or other matter.

Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul. Hale.

To ENGRIEVE. v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.

The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy, Which his sad speech infix'd in my breast, Rankled so sore, and fester'd inwardly, That my griev'd mind could find no rest. Fairy Queen.

Aches, and hurts, and cords, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon.

To ENGROSS. v. a. [grossir, French.]

1. To thicken; to make thick.

But more happy he than wife, Of that sea's nature did him not advise; The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were, Engross'd with mud, which did them foul agrieve, That every weighty thing they did appear. Fairy Queen.

2. To increase in bulk.

Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engross'd to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Wotton.

3. To fatten; to plump up.

Not sleeping, to engross his idle body; But praying, to enrich his watchful soul. Shakspeare.

4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.

If thou engross all the griefs as thine, Thou rob'st me of a moiety. Shakspeare.

Those two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

A dog, a parrot, or an ape Or some worse brute in human shape, Engross the fancies of the fair. Swift.

5. To purchase the whole of any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.

6. To copy in a large hand.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,

Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shakspeare.

A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross, Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope.

ENGROSSER. n. f. [from engross.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.

A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

ENGROSSMENT. n. f. [from engross.]

Appropriation of things in the gross; exorbitant acquisition.

Our thighs are pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey:

We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees, Are murdered for our pains! This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the dying father. Shakspeare.

Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption. Swift.

To ENGUA'RD. v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards. Not used.

A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream, He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs, And hold our lives at mercy. Shakspeare.

To ENHA'NCE. v. a. [hauffer, enhaufer, French.]

1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete.

Both of them high at once their hands enhanced,

And both at once their huge blows down did sway. Spenser.

2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.

The desire of money is every where the same; its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.

3 To raise in esteem.

What is it but the experience of want that enhances the value of plenty? L'Estrange.

The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enhance our pleasure. Atterbury.

4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.

To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enhanced and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond.

The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enhance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHA'NCEMENT. n. f. [from enhance.]

1. Increase; augmentation of value.

Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enhancement of rents. Bacon.

2. Aggravation; increase of ill.

Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enhancement of guilt. Government of the Tongue.

ENIGMA. n. f. [enigma, Lat. ænigma.]

A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow A meaning; which, if well I understand, From sacrilege will free the god's command. Dryden.

A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMATICAL. adj. [from enigma.]

1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. Shakspeare. Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful verities; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged processes. Boyle.

Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or non-solution. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively. Hammond.

ENIGMAT'ICALLY. adv. [from enigma.]

In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptance imply.

Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry. Broome.

ENIGMATIST. n. f. [from enigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; a maker of riddles.

That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the abovementioned enigmatist has done, I shall present him with a key to my riddle. Addison's Whig Examiner.

To ENJOIN. v. a. [enjoindre, French.]

To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperious than command.

To satisfy the good old man, I would bend under any heavy weight That he'll enjoin me to. Shakspeare.

Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillotson.

ENJO'INER. n. f. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Dict.

ENJO'INMENT. n. f. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.

Critical trial should be made by publick enjoinment, whereby determination might be settled beyond debate. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ENJOY. v. a. [jouir, enjoir, French.]

1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.

I could enjoy the pangs of death, And smile in agony. Addison's Cato.

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.

Edward the saint, in whom it pleased God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blessing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy. Hooker.

He, who, to enjoy Plato's clysmus, leap'd into the sea, Cleombrotus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight. This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjoir.

Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More.

When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the instigation of any appetite in nature? South.

To ENJOY. v. n. To live in happiness.

Then I shall be no more!

And Adam, wedded to another Eve, Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct. Milton.

ENJOYER. n. f. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession. Dict.

ENJOYMENT. n. f. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.

His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyments. Tillotson.

To ENKINDLE. v. a. [from kindle.]

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature To quit this horrid act. Shakspeare's King Lear.

2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.

Your hand

Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did;
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled. Shakspeare.

3. To incite to any act or hope.

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those who gave the thane of Cawder to me,
Promis'd no less to them?

—That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown. Shakspeare.

To ENLARGE. v. a. [enlargir, French.]

1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some, and others multiplies. Pope.

2. To increase any thing in magnitude; to extend.

Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land.

Locke.

3. To increase by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

4. To dilate; to expand.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you,
our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor.

5. To set free from limitation.

Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Shakspeare.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.

It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an error, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear.

Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandize.

This is that science which would truly enlarge mens minds, were it studied. Locke.

Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisi-bility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea;
by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shakspeare. Henry v.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.

They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise. Clarendon.

To ENLARGE. v. n.

1. To expatiate; to speak in many words.

They appointed the chancellor of the exchequer to enlarge upon any of those particulars.

Clarendon.

This is a theme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather with the memory of it were extinct. Decay of Piety.

2. To be further extended.

The caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out among themselves. Raleigh.

ENLARGEMENT. n. s. [from enlarge.]

1. Increase; augmentation; further extension.

The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues. Hayward.

The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,
Could give no limits to his vaster mind:
Our bounds enlargement was his latest toil,
Nor hath he left us pris'ners to our isle. Waller.

There never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, amassed or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by rivers. Woodward.

The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more set quarrels o
one entire assembly against another. Swift

The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch.

Swift.

2. Release from confinement or servitude.

Lieutenant,

At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Shakspeare's Henry v.

If thou holdest thy peace at the time, then shall their enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place. Ezher.

3. Magnifying representation.

And all who told it, added something new;
And all who heard it, made enlargements too.

Pope.

4. Expatiating speech; copious discourse.

He concluded with an enlargement upon the vices and corruptions which were got into the army. Clarendon.

ENLARGER. n. s. [from enlarge.] Amplifier; one that increases or dilates any thing.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, but confer what is in us unto his name and honour, ready to be swallowed in any worthy enlarger.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ENLIGHT. v. a. [from light.] To illuminate; to supply with light; to enlighten.

Wit from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlights the present, and shall warm the last.

Pope.

To ENLIGHTEN. v. a. [from light.]

1. To illuminate; to supply with light.

God will enlighten my darkness. Psalms.
As the sun shineth to the whole world, so there is no faith but this one published, the brightness whereof must enlighten all that come to the knowledge of the truth. Hooker.

2. To quicken in the faculty of vision.

His eyes were enlightened. Sam.
Love never fails to master what he finds;
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds.

Dryden.

3. To instruct; to furnish with increase of knowledge.

This doctrine is so agreeable to reason, that we meet with it in the writings of the enlightened heathens. Spektor.

'Tis he who enlightens our understanding, corrects our wills, and enables us to subdue our affections to the law of God. Rogers.

4. To cheer; to exhilarate; to gladden.

5. To illuminate with divine knowledge.

Those who were once enlightened. Hebrews.

ENLIGHTENER. n. s. [from enlighten.]

1. To make quick; to make alive; to animate.

2. To make vigorous or active.

These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts and origins of light,
Enliven worlds denied to human sight. Prior.

In a glass-house the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.

3. To make sprightly or vivacious.

4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLIVENER. n. s. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.

But fire th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled powers.

Dryden.

To ENLUMINE. v. n. [enluminer, Fr.]

To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. Not in use.

For having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spenser.

ENMITY. n. s. [from enemy; as if enemity,
inamity.]

1. Unfriendly disposition; malevolence; aversion.

Their being forced to their books, in an age at enmity with all restraint, has been the reason why many have hated books. Locke.

2. Contrariety of interests or inclinations; mutual malignity.

They shall within this hour,
On a dissention of a doit break out
In bitterest enmity. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Between thee and the woman I will put Enmity; and between thine and her seed;
Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel.

Milton.

How far those controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not my business to shew or determine.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

3. State of opposition.

Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? James.

You must firmly be convinced, that every sin you commit sets you at enmity with heaven, and will, if not forsaken, render you incapable of it.

Wake's Preparation for Death.

4. Malice; mischievous attempts.

I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air. Shakspeare.
He who performs his duty in a station of great power, must needs incur the utter enmity of many,
and the high displeasure of more. Atterbury.

To ENNOBLE. v. a. [ennobler, French.]

1. To raise from commonalty to nobility.

Many fair promotions
Are given daily to ennoble those,
That scarce some two days since were worth a noble. Shakspeare.

2. To dignify; to aggrandize; to exalt;
to raise.

God raised up the spirit of this great person, and ennobled his courage and conduct with the entire overthrow of this mighty host. South.

What can ennoble fots, or slaves, or cowards?
Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards.

Pope.

3. To elevate; to magnify.
None so lovely, sweet and fair,
Or do more ennoble love. Waller.

4. To make famous or illustrious.
The Spaniards could not as invaders land in Ireland, but only ennobled some of the coasts thereof with shipwrecks. Bacon.

ENNOBLEMENT. n. f. [from ennoble.]
1. The act of raising to the rank of nobility.
He added, during parliament, to his former creations, the ennoblement or advancement in nobility of a few others. Bacon.

2. Exaltation; elevation; dignity.
The eternal wisdom enriched us with all ennoblements, suitable to the measures of an untroubled goodness.
Glarville.

ENODATION. n. f. [from enodatio, Latin.]
1. The act of untying a knot.
2. Solution of a difficulty. Diä.

ENO RMITY. n. f. [from enormous.]
1. Deviation from rule; irregularity.
2. Deviation from right; depravity; corruption.

We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government. Spenser.
That this law will be always sufficient to bridle or restrain enormity, no man can warrant.
Hooker.

There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit. Addison's Guardian.

3. Atrocious crime; flagitious villany; crimes exceeding the common measure.
In this sense it has a plural.

It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities; the practice may be proved by example. Swift.

ENORMOUS. adj. [from enormis, Latin.]
1. Irregular; out of rule; not regulated by any stated measure.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait.
Milton.

Nature here
Wanton'd, as in her prime; and plaid at will
Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweets,
Wild above rule, or art, enormous blifs! Milton.

2. Excursive; beyond the limits of a regular figure.

The enormous part of the light in the circumference of every lucid point, ought to be less discernible in shorter telescopes than in longer, because the shorter transmit less light to the eye.
Newton's Opticks.

3. Disordered; confused.

I shall find time
From this enormous state, and seek to give Losses their remedies. Shakspeare's King Lear.

4. Wicked beyond the common measure.

5. Exceeding in bulk the common measures:
always used with some degree of dislike, or horror,
or wonder.

A giant shepherd here his flock maintains.
Far from the rest, and solitary reigns,
A form enormous! far unlike the race
Of human birth, in stature, or in face. Pope.

ENORMOUSLY. adv. [from enormous.]
Beyond measure.

One who could ever espouse a notion so enormously absurd and senseless, as that the world was framed by chance. Woodward.

ENORMOUSNESS. n. f. [from enormous.]
Immeasurable excess.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousness of our works, but what should hinder them from measuring the master by the disciples? Decay of Piety.

ENOUGH. adj. [from genoh, Saxon; ganah, Gothick; genoeg, Dutch. It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enow is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb;
except that after the verb To have, or
To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enuf.]
In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why would'st thou go, with one consent they cry,
When thou hast gold enough, and Emily? Dryd.
When there was not room enough for their herds, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

ENOUGH. n. f.
1. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence.

'Tis enough for me to have endeavoured the union of my country, whilst I continued in public employments. Temple.

The indolency and enjoyment we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change, being content, and that is enough.
Locke.

Enough for me that to the list'ning swains,
First in those fields I sung the silvan strains.
Pope.

I will not quarrel with the present age: it has done enough for me, in making and keeping you two my friends. Pope.

2. Something equal to a man's powers or faculties.

Some great defects and main errors in his nature, customs, and proceedings, he had enough to do to save and help, with a thousand little industries

ENOUGH. adv.
1. In a sufficient degree; in a degree that gives satisfaction.

2. It notes a slight augmentation of the positive degree: as, I am ready enough to quarrel; that is, I am rather quarrelsome than peaceable.

I am apt enough to think, that this same binarium of a stronger and a weaker, like unto masculine and feminine, doth hold in all living bodies.
Bacon.

It is sometimes pleasant enough to consider the different notions which different persons have of the same thing. Addison.

They are now in prison at Florence; and, as it is said, treated hardly enough. Addison on Italy.

3. Sometimes it notes diminution: as, the song is well enough; that is, not quite well, though not much amiss.

4. An exclamation noting fulness or satiety.

Macbeth, beware Macduff!
Beware the thane of Fife! Dismiss me.—Enough.
Shakspeare.

Henceforth, I'll bear
Affliction 'till it do cry out itself,
Enough, enough, and die. Shakspeare.

ENOW. The plural of enough. In a sufficient number.

The earth hath since born enow bleeding witness, that it was no want of true courage. Sidney.

The walls of the church there are enow contented to build; the marbles are polished, the roofs shine with gold, the altar hath precious stones to adorn it, and of Christ's ministers no choice at all. Hooker.

Man had selfish foes enow besides,
That, day and night, for his destruction wait.
Milton.

My conquering brother will have slaves enow,
To pay his cruel vows for victory. Dryden.
There are at Rome enow modern works of architecture to employ any reasonable man.
Addison on Medals.

EN PASSANT. adv. [French.] By the way.

TO ENRAGE. v. a. [from enrager, French.]
To irritate; to provoke; to make furious;
to exasperate.

The justice of their quarrel should not so much encourage as enrage them, being to revenge the dishonour done to their king, and to chastise deceitful enemies. Hayward.

Enrag'd at this, upon the bawd I flew;
And that which most enrag'd me was, 'twas true. Walsh.

TO ENRANGE. v. a. [from range.] To place regularly; to put in order.

In their jaw
Three ranks of iron teeth enranged were.

Beholds her nymphs enrang'd in shady wood.
Fairy Queen.

TO ENRANK. v. a. [from rank.] To place in orderly ranks.

No leisure had he to enrank his men. Shakspeare.

TO ENRAPT. v. a. [from rapt: the participle preterit seems to be enrapt.]

1. To throw into an ecstacy; to transport with enthusiasm.

I myself
Am, like a prophet, suddenly enrapt.
To tell thee, that this day is ominous. Shakspeare.

2. In the following quotation it seems erroneously written for enwrap, involv'd; wrap up.

Nor hath he been so enrapt in those studies as to neglect the polite arts of painting and poetry.
Arbutnot and Pope.

TO ENRAPTURE. v. a. [from rapture.]
To transport with pleasure; to delight highly.

TO ENRAVISH. v. a. [from ravish.] To throw into ecstacy; to transport with delight.

What wonder,
Frail men, whose eyes seek heavenly things to see,
At sight thereof so much enravish'd be?
Spenser.

ENRAVISHMENT. n. f. [from enravish.]
Ecstacy of delight.

They contract a kind of splendor from the seemingly obscuring veil, which adds to the enravishments of her transported admirers.
Glarville's Sceptis.

TO ENRHEUM. v. a. [from enrheumer, French.]
To have rheum through cold.

The physician is to enquire where the party hath taken cold or enrheum'd. Harvey.

TO ENRICH. v. a. [from enricher, French.]

1. To make wealthy; to make opulent.
The king will enrich him with great riches,
and will give him his daughter. Samuel.
Henry is able to enrich his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich.
Shakspeare.

Great and glorious Rome queen of the earth,
So far renown'd, and with the spoils enrich'd
Of nations. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Those are so unhappy as to rob others, without enriching themselves. Denham.

2. To fertilize; to make fruitful.
See the sweet brooks in silver mazes creep,
Enrich the meadows, and supply the deep.
Blackmore.

3. To store; to supply with augmentation of any thing desirable.

There is not any one among them that could ever enrich his own understanding with any certain truth, or ever edify others therein. Raleigh.

ENRICHMENT. n. f. [from enrich.]

1. Augmentation of wealth.
2. Amplification; improvement by addition.

I have procured a translation of that book into the general language, not without great and ample additions, and enrichment thereof.

Bacon's Holy War.

It is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time and pains among infinites and unsearchables.

Watts's Logick.

To ENRIDGE. v. a. [from ridge.] To form with longitudinal protuberances or ridges.

He had a thousand noses,

Horns walk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea:
It was some fiend.

Her mother hath intended,

That quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd
With ribbands pendant, flaring 'bout her head.

Shakspeare.

To ENROLL. v. a. [from enroller, French.]

1. To insert in a roll, list, or register.

There be enrolled amongst the king's forces about thirty thousand men of the Jews. Mac.

We find ourselves enrolled in this heavenly family as servants, and as sons. Spratt.

The champions, all of high degree,
Who knighthood lov'd, and deeds of chivalry,
Throng'd to the lists, and envy'd to behold
The names of others, not their own enroll'd.

Dryden.

Mentes, an ever-honour'd name of old,
High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd.

Pope.

Heroes and heroines of old,

By honour only were enroll'd

Among their brethren of the skies;

To which, though late, shall Stella rise. Swift.

2. To record; to leave in writing.

He swore consent to your succession;

His oath enrolled in the parliament.

Shaksp.

Laws, which none shall find

Left them enroll'd; or what the spirit within Shall on the heart engrave. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. To involve; to inwrap.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw Huge flame, that dimmed all the heav'n's light,
Enroll'd in dusky smok and brimstone blue.

Fairy Queen.

ENROLLER. n. f. [from enrol.] He that enrolls; he that registers.

ENROLLMENT. n. f. [from enrol.] Register; writing in which any thing is recorded; record.

The king himself caused to be enrolled, and testified by a notary publick; and delivered the enrollments, with his own hands, to the bishop of Salisbury.

Davies on Ireland.

To ENROOT. v. a. [from root.] To fix by the root; to implant deep.

He cannot so precisely weed this land,

As his misdoubts present occasion:

His foes are so enrooted with his friends,

That, plucking to unfix an enemy,

He doth unfasten so and shake a friend.

Shakspeare.

To ENROUND. v. a. [from round.] To environ; to surround; to encircle; to inclose.

Upon his royal face there is no note

How dread an army hath enrounded him.

Shakspeare's Henry v.

ENS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Any being or existence.

ENSAMPLE. n. f. [from esempio, Italian.]

Example; pattern; subject of imitation.

This orthography is now justly disused.

Such life should be the honour of your light;

Such death, the sad ensample of your night.

Spenser's Sonnets.

Ye have us for an ensample.

Phil.

Such as would be willing to make use of our ensample to do the same thing, where there is not the same necessity, may not be able to vouch our practice for their excuse.

Sunderfon.

To ENSAMPLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To exemplify; to show by example; to give as a copy.

I have followed all the ancient poets historical; first, Homer, who, in the person of Agamemnon, ensampled a good governor and a virtuous man.

Spenser.

To ENSANGUINE. v. a. [from sanguis, Latin; ensanglanter, French.] To smear with gore; to suffuse with blood.

With cruel tournament the squadrons join,
Where cattle pastur'd late; now scatter'd lies,

Sidney.

To ENSLAVE. v. a. [from slave.]

1. To reduce to servitude; to deprive of liberty.

The conquer'd also, and enslav'd by war,

Shall, with their freedom lost, their virtue lose.

Milton.

I to do this! I, whom you once thought brave,

To sell my country, and my king enslave.

Dryden.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;

He reels, and falling fills the spacious cave.

Dryden's Æneid.

He is certainly the most subjected, the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding.

Locke.

While the balance of power is equally held, the ambition of private men gives neither danger nor fear, nor can possibly enslave their country.

Swift.

2. To make over to another as his slave or bondman.

No man can make another man to be his slave, unless he hath first enslaved himself to life and death, to pleasure or pain, to hope or fear: command those passions, and you are freer than the Parthian king.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

The more virtuously any man lives, and the less he is enslaved to any lust, the more ready he is to entertain the principles of religion.

Tillotson.

A man, not having the power of his own life, cannot by compact, or his own consent, enslave himself to any one, nor put himself under the absolute arbitrary power of another, to take away life when he pleases.

Locke.

ENSLA'VEMENT. n. f. [from enslave.] The state of servitude; slavery; abject subjection.

The children of Israel, according to their method of sinning, after mercies, and thereupon returning to a fresh enslavement to their enemies, had now passed seven years in cruel subjection.

South.

ENSLA'VER. n. f. [from enslave.] He that reduces others to a state of servitude.

What indignation in her mind,
Against enslavers of mankind!

Swift.

TO ENSUE. v. a. [ensuivre, French.] To follow; to pursue.

Flee evil, and do good; seek peace and ensue it.

Com. Prayer.

But now these Epicures begin to smile,
And say, my doctrine is more safe than true;
And that I fondly do myself beguile,
While these receiv'd opinions I ensue.

Davies.

TO ENSUE. v. n.

1. To follow as a consequence to premises.

Let this be granted, and it shall hereupon plainly ensue, that the light of scripture once shining in the world, all other light of nature is therewith in such sort drowned, that now we need it not.

Hooker.

2. To succeed in a train of events, or course of time.

The man was noble;
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,
Destroy'd his country, and his name remains
To the ensuing age abhor'd.

Shakspeare.

Bishops are placed by collation of the king, without any precedent election or confirmation ensuing.

Hayward.

Of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue.

Milton.

With mortal heat each other shall pursue;
What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue!

Dryden.

Impute not then those ills which may ensue
To me, but those who with incessant hate Pursue my life.
Than grave Clarissa graceful wai'd her fan;
Silence ensu'd, and thus the nymph began.

Pope.

ENSUR'ANCE. n. f. [from ensure.]

1. Exemption from hazard, obtained by the payment of a certain sum.

2. The sum paid for security.

ENSUR'ANCER. n. f. [from ensure.] He who undertakes to exempt from hazard.

The vain ensurancers of life,
And they who most perform'd, and promis'd less,
Ev'n Short and Hobbes, forsook th' unequal strife.

Dryden.

TO ENSURE. v. a. [from sure, assurer, French.]

1. To ascertain; to make certain; to secure.

It is easy to entail debts on succeeding ages, but how to ensure peace for any term of years is difficult enough.

Swift.

2. To exempt any thing from hazard by paying a certain sum, on condition of being reimbursed for miscarriage.

3. To promise reimbursement of any miscarriage for a certain reward stipulated.

A mendicant contracted with a country fellow for a quantity of corn, to ensure his sheep for that year.

L'Estrange.

A work of rich entail, and curious mold,
Woven with anticks and wild imagery.

Fairy Q.

TO ENTA'IL. v. a. [tailler, to cut; entail, French.]

1. To settle the descent of any estate, so that it cannot be by any subsequent possessor bequeathed at pleasure.

I here entail

The crown to thee and to thine heirs for ever.

Shakspeare.

Had Richard unconstrain'd resign'd the throne,
A king can give no more than is his own:

The title stood entail'd, had Richard had a son.

Dryden.

2. To fix unalienably upon any person or thing.

None ever had a privilege of infallibility entail'd to all he said.

Digby on Bodies.

The intemperate and unjust transmit their bodily infirmities and diseases to their children, and entail a secret curse upon their estates.

Tillotson.

3. To cut. Obsolete. In the following passage it is neuter.

The mortal steel, spiteously entail'd,
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their gismbeaux falls.

Fairy Queen.

TO ENTA'ME. v. a. [from tame.] To tame; to subjugate; to subdue.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, and your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.

Shakspeare.

To ENUBILATE. v. a. [e and nubile, Latin.] To clear from clouds. Diæ.

To ENUCLEATE. v. a. [enucleo, Latin.] To solve; to clear; to disentangle. Diæ.

To ENVELOP. v. a. [envelopper, French.]

1. To inwrap; to cover; to invest with some integument.

2. To cover; to hide; to surround.

The best and wholesomest spirits of the night envelop you, good provost. Shakspeare.

A cloud of smoke envelops either host,

And all at once the combatants are lost:

Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,

Couriers with couriers jousting, men with men. Dryden.

It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that enveloped them will remove. Locke.

Nocturnal shades

This world envelop, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts. Philips.

3. To line; to cover on the inside.

His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Darkened with filthy dust. Fairy Queen.

ENVELOPE. n. f. [French.]

A wrapper; an outward case; an integument; a cover.

Send these to paper-sparing Pope;
And, when he sits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight. Swift.

To ENVENOM. v. a. [from venom.]

1. To taint with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenom'd. Shakspeare.

Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd

With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,
Through pain, up by the roots Thessalian pines. Milton.

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fame
Of harmless men. Philips.

2. To make odious.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it! Shakspeare.

3. To enrage; to exasperate.

With her full force she threw the pois'nomous dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;

That thus envy'd the might kindle rage,
And sacrifice to strife her house and husband's age. Dryden.

E'NVIALE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune,
do happily possess themselves. Carew.

E'NVIER. n. f. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues. Bacon's Essays.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced.
Clarendon.

E'NVIOUS. adj. [from envy.]

1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. Sidney.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shakespeare.

2. Sometimes with against.

Be not thou envious against evil men. Prov.

3. Sometimes with at.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked. Prov.

4. Commonly with of.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be.
Dryden.

E'NVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surpise me at my book!
And sure as they're alive at night,
As soon as gone, will shew their spight. Swift.

To ENVI'RON. v. a. [environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakespeare.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains.
Knolles' History.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

Within the environing rocks flood the city.
Sandys.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,

He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelop.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, 'till mischief and despair Drive you to break your necks. Shakespeare.

Since she must go, and I must mourn, come night,

Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears. Shaksp.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer.
Shakespeare.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise environs me.
Milton.

4. To enclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ. Cleveland.

ENVIRONS. n. f. [environs, Fr.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

To ENUMERATE. v. a. [enumero, Lat.]
To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty. Wake's Preparation for Death.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. f. [enumeratio, Lat.]
The act of numbering or counting over;
number told out.

Whoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of christianity is laid on charity. Spratt.

The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements.
Watts' Logick.

To ENUNCIATE. v. a. [enuncio, Lat.]

To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.

ENUNCIATION. n. f. [enunciatio, Latin.]

1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Expression.

ENUNCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciate.]

Declarative; expressive.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ayliffe.

ENUNCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.]

Declaratively.

E'NVOY. n. f. [envoye, French.]

1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air Brings dismal tidings. Denham.

Perseus sent envoys to Carthage, to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at ev'ry gate,
At ev'ry passage to the senses wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

To ENVY. v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin.]

1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways. Proverbs.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty.
Collier of Envy.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakespeare.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Johnson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To E'NVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity:
with at.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakespeare.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts
he bestows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

E'NVY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shaksp.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their virtuous and superiour genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shaksp.

6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

To ENWHE'EL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakespeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Othello.

To ENWO'MB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwombed of this child,
This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood.
Spenser.

I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwombed mine. Shakespeare.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Africk niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May 't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer than before? Donne.

EO'LIPILE. n. f. [from Æolus and pila.]

A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe: which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an colipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarifies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet.

EPACT. n. f. [ἐπακτῆ.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 minutes 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days; but 30 being an intire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten; Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder on Time.

EPA'ULMENT. n. f. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidewalk made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillon, or mafs of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

EPEN'THESIS. n. f. [ἐπεισθεσις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

EPHA. n. f. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

The epha and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Ezekiel.

EPHE'MERA. n. f. [ἐφήμερον.]

1. A fever that terminates in one day.

2. An insect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL. } adj. [ἐφήμερος.] Diur-

EPHE'MERICK. } nal; beginning and ending in a day.

This was no more than a mere bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral fit of applause. Wotton.

EPHE'MERIS. n. f. [ἐφημερίς.]

1. A journal; an account of daily transactions. * 1

2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light, Both month, and day, and hour, he measur'd right;

And told more truly than the ephemeris;

For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryden.

EPHE'MERIST. n. f. [from ephemeris.]

One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before, he was discoursing of and slighting the art of foolish astrologers, and gene-thiical ephemerists, that pry into the horoscope of natiivities. Howel.

EPHEMERON-WORM. n. f. [from ἐφήμερον and worm.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Derham.

E'PHOD. n. f. [אֶפֶד.] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests.

The ephod worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton: and upon the part which came over his two shoulders were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast-plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen. Calmet.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Exodus.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few

As are those pearls of morning dew,

Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys.

E'PIC. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἑπικός.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroick, or to contain one great action achieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song, While music numbers, or while verse has feet. Dryden.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic. Broome.

EPICED'UM. n. f. [ἐπικήδιον.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay; These, your own anthems, shall become Your lasting epicedium. Sandys' Paraphrase.

E'PICURE. n. f. [epicureus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes, And mingle with the English epicures. Shaksp.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge. Locke.

EPICU'REAN. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts, Keep his brain fuming; epicurean cooks, Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shaksp.

What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this! Shakspere.

E'PICURISM. n. f. [from epicure.] Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

Here you do keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold, That this our court, infected with their manners, Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shakspere.

There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy. Government of the Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism. Calamy's Sermons.

TO EPICURIZE. v. a. [from Epicurus.]

To devour like an epicure. A word not used.

While I could see thee full of eager pain

My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine. Flatman.

EPICY'CLE. n. f. [ἐπί and κύκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the sphere

With centric and eccentric, scribbled o'er;

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

EPICY'CLOID. n. f. [ἐπικυκλοειδής.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIDE'MICAL. } adj. [ἐπί and δῆμος.]

EPIDE'MICK. } 1. That falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon's Henry VII.

As the proportion of epidemic diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place. Graunt.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. Saurh.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemic among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all; Scotland's a nation epidemic. Oleaveland.

EPIDE'RMIS. n. f. [ἐπίδερμις.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

E'PIGRAM. n. f. [epigramma, Latin.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour: dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakspere.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician, that had been the death of thousands? Peacham of Poetry.

I writ

An epigram that boasts more truth than wit.

Gay.

EPIGRAMMA'TICAL. } adj. [epigrammaticus, Latin.]

EPIGRAMMA'TICK. } 1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous foretelling to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainties; he shines, but glares not; and is stately, without ambition.

Addison.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso.

Addison.

EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector.

Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish.

Peacham.

EPIGRAPHE. n. f. [ἐπιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue.

Diſt.

EPILEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιληψία.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence that the mind cannot restrain them.

Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy: This is the second fit.

Shakspeare's Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cachochymia; the phrenitis from cholerick spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes.

Floyer on the Humours.

EPILEPTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick visage! Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Shakspeare.

Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

EPILOGUE. n. f. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues.

Shakspeare.

Are you mad, you dog? I am to rise and speak the epilogue.

Dryden.

EPINYCTIS. n. f. [ἐπινυκτίς.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain.

Wifeman's Surgery.

EPIPHANY. n. f. [ἐπιφάνεια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was.

Diſt.

EPIPHONE'MA. n. f. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the isles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound.

Swift.

EPIPHORA. n. f. [ἐπιφορά.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes.

Harris.

EPIPHYLOSPE'ROUS. adj. [from ἐπιφύλλον, and σπέρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves.

Harris.

EPIPHYSIS. n. f. [ἐπιφύσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation.

Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite.

Wifeman.

EPI'PLOC. n. f. [ἐπιπλοκή.] A figure of rhetorick, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another: as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPI'SCOPACY. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved.

Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever.

Ayliffe.

EPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction.

Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men.

Rogers.

EPI'SCOPATE. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

EPISODE. n. f. [ἐπίσωδη.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject.

Addison.

EPISO'DICAL. } adj. [from episode.] Con-EPISO'DICK. } tained in an episode;
pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle.

Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes.

Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPA'STICK. n. f. [ἐπι and σπᾶω.]

1. Drawing.

2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

This matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering.

Arbuthnot.

EPI'STLE. n. f. [ἐπιστολή.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes, She half consents, who silently denies.

Dryden.

EPI'STOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

Wifeman's Surgery.

E'PITHE'T. n. f. [ἐπίθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villainous, to the author.

Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment.

Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?—

Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will.

Shakspeare.

EPI'TOME. n. f. [ἐπιτομή.] Abridgment; abbreviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of yours, Which by th' interpretation of full time, May shew like all yourself.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency.

Wotton.

It would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the most material heads.

Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places.

Watts.

To E'PITOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove

Into the glasses of your eyes;

So made such mirrors and such spies,

That they did all to you epitomise.

Donne.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature.

Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomized many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue.

Addison's Spectator.

EPI'TOMISER. } n. f. [from epitomise.] An EPI'TOMIST. } abridger; an abstracter;
a writer of epitomes.

E'POCH. } n. f. [ἐποχή.] The time at EPO'CHA. } which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochas, or terms of time.

Brown.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falshood, as well as debauchery.

South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease, No action leave to busy chronicles: Such whose supine felicity but makes In story chasms, in epochas mistakes.

Dryden.

Their several epochas or beginnings, as from the creation of the world from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages.

Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochas marked out to us by the motions observable in it.

Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe.

Prior.

EPO'DE. n. f. [ἐπώδευς.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPE'E. n. f. [ἐποποιία.] An epic or heroic poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own.

Dryden's Virgil.

EPULATIO. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EPULO'TICK. n. f. [ἐπουλώτικος.] A cicatrizing medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common farcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks.

Wifeman of Inflammation.

EQUABILITY. n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom.

Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiaticks lazy.

Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as the elysian fields.

Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony.

Arbuthnot.

EQUABLY. adj. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centry, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances.

Cheyne.

EQUAL. adj. [æqualis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them.

Eccles.

Equal lot

May join us; equal joy, as equal love.

Milton.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles.

Hale.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English.

Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears, At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears; An equal temper in his mind he found, When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd.

Dryden.

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me.

Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendation equal to your merit.

Dryden's Fab. Dedic.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall; Equal and unconcern'd I look on all: Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me, And both shall draw the lots their fates decree.

Dryden's Æneid.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me.

Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and sware to all equal conditions.

Mac.

8. Being upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves.

Mac.

EQUAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superior to another.

He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth.

Shakspeare's Much Ado.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome.

2 Mac.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiors, because they look upon him as their equal.

Addison.

To my dear equal in my native land, My plighted vow I gave: I his received: Each swore with truth with pleasure each believ'd: The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd.

Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many of my equals in mine own nation.

Gal.

TO EQUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

One whole all not equals Edward's moiety.

Shakspeare.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.

She sought Sicheus through the shady grove, Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love.

Dryden.

Nor you, great queen, these offices repent, Which he will equal, and perhaps augment.

Dryden's Virgil.

TO EQUALISE. v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture.

Bro.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is.

Digby.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame, That if together ye fed all one flame, It could not equalise the hundredth part Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart.

Waller.

EQUA'LITY. n. f. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestick powers, Breeds scrupulous faction.

Shakspeare.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise,

Of proud ambition; who, not content

With fair equality, fraternal state,

Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,

Over his brethren.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance.

Swift.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

E'QUALLY. adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile mens vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality.

Rogers.

The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor.

Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does.

Locke.

3. Impartially.

We shall use them,

As we shall find their merits and our safety May equally determine.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

E'QUALNESS. n. f. [from equal.] Equality.

Let me lament

That our stars unreconcilable should have divided Our equalness to this.

Shakspeare.

EQUANGULAR. adj. [from equus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY. n. f. [æquanimitas, Lat.] Evenness of mind, neither elated nor depressed.

EQUANIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Latin.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUATION. n. f. [æquare, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require.

Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time.

Newton's Opticks.

EQUATION. [In algebra.] An expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as,  $3x = 36.d.$

Diæ.

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. Diā.

EQUATOR. n. f. [equator, Latin.] The equator on the earth or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles: neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown.

On the other side the equator, there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATORIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptick planes. Cheyne.

EQUERRY. n. f. [ecurie, Dutch.] Master of the horse.

3. Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

EQUICRURAL. } adj. [equus and crus,
EQUICRURE. } Latin.]

1. Having legs of an equal length.
2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equicrural triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Digby on the Soil.
We successively draw lines from angle to angle until seven equicrural triangles be described. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUIDISTANT. adj. [equus and distans, Latin.] Being at the same distance.

The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Ray.

EQUIDISTANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

EQUIFORMITY. n. f. [equus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown.

EQUILATERAL. adj. [equus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.

Trifling futility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

TO EQUILIBRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affrication been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUILIBRATION. n. f. [from equilibrium.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILIBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.
2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrio
If deities descend or no;
Then let th' affirmative prevail,
As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbuthnot.

EQUINECESSARY. adj. [equus and necessarius, Lat.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,
In fights, are equinecessary. Hudibras.

EQUINOCTIAL. n. f. [equus and nox, Latin.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe: the same with equator.

EQUINOCTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.
Thrice th' equinoctial line
He circled; four times cross'd the ear of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure. Milton.

Some say the sun
Was bid turn reins from th' equinoctial road,
Like distant breadth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they covet shades and Thracia's gales, Pining with equinoctial heat. Philips.

EQUINOCTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclanately, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

EQUINOX. n. f. [equus and nox, Lat.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.

It ariseth not heliacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb, was about the vernal equinox. Ray.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,
If March beheld the first created man;
And since the vernal equinox, the sun
In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryd.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,
The one as long as th' other. Shakspeare.

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINUMERANT. adj. [equus and numerus, Latin.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brass. Arbuthnot on Coins.

TO EQUIP. v. a. [equipper, French.]

1. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.

EQUIPAGE. n. f. [equipage, French.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.
2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
From th' armory of God; where stand of old,
Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harness'd at hand, Celestial equipage! Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Attendance; retinue.

Soon as thy dreadful trump begins to sound,
The god of war, with his fierce equipage,
Thou dost awake, sleep never he so sound. Fairy Queen.

I will not lend thee a penny.—
I will retort the sum in equipage. Shakspeare.
Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair. Pope.

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

EQUIPAGED. adj. [from equipage.] Accoutred; attended; having fine habits; having splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train

The consideration of public utility is, by very good advice, judged at the least the equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker.

5. Of the same import or meaning.

The use of the word minister is brought down to the literal signification of it, a servant; for now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial, are terms equivalent. South.

EQUI'VALENT. n. f. A thing of the same weight, dignity, or value.

The slave without a ransom shall be sent; It rests for you to make th' equivalent. Dryden.

Fancy a regular obedience to one law will be a full equivalent for their breach of another. Rogers.

EQUI'VOCAL. adj. [equivocus, Latin.]

1. Of doubtful signification; meaning different things; standing for different notions.

These sentences to sugar, or to gall, Being strong on both sides, are equivocal. Shakspere's Othello.

Words of different significations, taken in general, are of an equivocal sense; but being considered with all their particular circumstances, they have their sense restrained. Stillingfleet.

The greater number of those who held this were misguided by equivocal terms. Swift.

2. Uncertain; doubtful; happening different ways.

Equivocal generation is the production of plants without seed, or of insects or animals without parents, in the natural way of coition between male and female; which is now believed never to happen, but that all bodies are univocally produced. Harris.

There is no such thing as equivocal or spontaneous generation; but all animals are generated by animal parents of the same species with themselves. Ray.

Those half-learn'd wittlings, num'rous in our isle

As half-form'd insects on the banks of Nile; Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call, Their generation's so equivocal. Pope.

EQUI'VOCAL. n. f. Ambiguity; word of doubtful meaning.

Shall two or three wretched equivocals have the force to corrupt us? Dennis.

EQUI'VOCALLY. adv. [from equivocal.]

1. Ambiguously; in a doubtful or double sense.

Words abstracted from their proper sense and signification, lose the nature of words, and are only equivocally so called. South.

2. By uncertain or irregular birth; by equivocal generation; by generation out of the stated order.

No insect or animal did ever proceed equivocally from putrefaction, unless in miraculous cases; as in Egypt by the divine judgments. Bentley.

EQUI'VOCALNESS. n. f. [from equivocal.] Ambiguity; double meaning.

Distinguish the equivocalness, or latitude of the word, and then point out that determinate part which is the ground of my demonstration. Norris.

To EQUI'VOCATE. v. n. [equivocatio, Latin.] To use words of double meaning; to use ambiguous expressions; to mean one thing and express another.

Not only Jesuits can equivocate. Dryden.

My soul disdain'd a promise;— But yet your false equivocating tongue, Your looks, your eyes, your ev'ry motion promis'd:

But you are ripe in frauds, and learn'd in falsehoods. Smith.

EQUIVOCATION. n. f. [equivocatio, Lat.]

From them I go
This uncouth errand sole. Milton.

His eyes,
That run through all the heav'ns, or down to th' earth.

Bear his swift errands, over moist and dry,
O'er sea and land. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Well thou do'st to hide from common fight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light;
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame,
Tripping from sea, on such an errand came.
Dryden's Homer.

ERRANT. adj. [errans, Lat. errant, Fr.]

1. Wandering; roving; rambling. Particularly applied to an order of knights much celebrated in romances, who roved about the world in search of adventures.

It was thought that there are just seven planets, or errant stars, in the lower orbs of heaven; but it is now demonstrable unto sense, that there are many more. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Chief of domestick knights and errant,
Either for charrel or for warrant. Hudibras.

2. Vile; abandoned; completely bad. See ARRANT.

They are incommoded with a slimy matter cough, stink of breath, and an erratick fever. Harvey on Consumptions.

ERRATICALLY. adv. [from erratic or erratick.] Without rule; without any established method or order.

They come not forth in generations erratically, or different from each other; but in specifical and regular shapes. Brown.

ERRHINE. adj. [ῥῆνας.] Snuffed up the nose; occasioning sneezing.

We see sage, or betony bruised, sneezing powder, and other powders or liquors, which the physicians call errhines, put into the nose to draw phlegm from the head. Bacon.

ERRO'NEOUS. adj. [from erro, Latin.]

1. Wandering; unsettled.

They roam
Erroneous and disconsolate, themselves Accusing, and their chiefs improvident
Of military chance. Philips.

This circle, by being placed here, stopped much of the erroneous light, which otherwise would have disturbed the vision. Newton.

Unblam'd abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this done rever'd her prudent lord;
Who now, so heav'n decrees, is doom'd to mourn,
Bitter constraint! erroneous and forlorn. Pope.

2. Irregular; wandering from the right road.

If the vessels, instead of breaking, yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniences of erroneous circulation; that is, when the blood strays into the vessels destined to carry serum or lymph. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Mistaking; misled by error.

Thou art far from destroying the innocent with the guilty, and the erroneous with the malicious. King Charles.

There is the erroneous as well as the rightly informed conscience. South.

4. Mistaken; not conformable to truth; physically false.

Their whole counsel is condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be for a while. Hooker.

A wonderful erroneous observation that walketh about, is commonly received, contrary to all the true account of time and experience. Bacon.

The phenomena of light have been hitherto explained by supposing that they arise from new modifications of the rays, which is an erroneous supposition. Newton's Opticks.

ERRO'NEOUSLY. adv. [from erroneous.]

By mistake; not rightly.

The minds of men are erroneously persuaded, that it is the will of God to have those things done which they fancy. Hooker.

I could not discover the lenity of this sentence; but conceived it, perhaps, erroneously, rather to be rigorous than gentle. Gulliver.

ERRO'NEOUSNESS. n. f. [from erroneous.]

Physical falsehood; inconformity to truth.

The phenomena may be explained by his hypothesis, whereof he demonstrates the truth, together with the erroneousness of ours. Boyle.

ERROUR. n. f. [error, Latin.]

1. Mistake; involuntary deviation from truth.

Error is a mistake of our judgement giving assent to that which is not true. Locke.

Oh, hateful error, melancholy's child!
Why do'st thou shew to the apt thoughts of men,
The things that are not? Shakspeare.

2. A blunder; an act or assertion in which a mistake is committed.

In religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will blest it? Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.
He look'd like nature's error, as the mind
And body were not of a piece design'd,
But made for two, and by mistake in one were join'd. Dryden.

3. Roving excursion; irregular course.

What brought you living to the Stygian state?
Driv'n by the winds and errors of the sea,
Or did you Heav'n's superiour doom obey.
Dryden's Æneid.

4. [In theology.] Sin.

Blood he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. Hebrews.

5. [In law, more especially in our common law.] An error in pleading, or in the process; and the writ, which is brought for remedy of this oversight, is called a writ of error, which lies to redress false judgment given in any court of record. Corwell.

quakes. Woodward.

ERUDITION. n. f. [eruditio, Latin.] Learning; knowledge obtained by study and instruction.

Fam'd by thy tutor, and thy parts of nature;
Thrice fam'd beyond all erudition. Shaksp.
The earl was of good erudition, having been placed at study in Cambridge very young.
Wotton.

To your experience in state affairs you have also joined no vulgar erudition, which all your modesty is not able to conceal; for to understand critically the delicacies of Horace, is a height to which few of our noblemen have arrived.
Dryden.

Some gentlemen, abounding in their university erudition, fill their sermons with philosophical terms. Swift.

ERUGINOUS. adj. [æruginosus, Latin.] Partaking of the substance or nature of copper.

Copperas is a rough and acrimoneous kind of salt, drawn out of ferreous and eruginous earths, partaking chiefly of iron and copper; the blue of copper, the green of iron. Browne.

lancholy, or upon an adust stibial or eruginous
sulphur. Harvey.

ERUPTION. n. f. [eruptio, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking or bursting forth from any confinement.

Finding themselves pent in by the exterior earth, they pressed with violence against that arch, to make it yield and give way to their dilatation and eruption. Burnet's Theory.

2. Burst; emission; something forcing itself out suddenly.

In part of Media there are eruptions of flames out of plains. Bacon's Natural History.

Upon a signal given the eruption began; fire and smoke, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance. Addison.

3. Sudden excursion of a hostile kind.

Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption, thither or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold Celestial spirits in bondage. Milton.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work;
Left he, incens'd at such eruption bold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd.
Milton.

4. Violent exclamation.

To his secretary, whom he laid in a pallet near him for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would, in the absence of all other ears and eyes, break out into bitter and passionate eruptions. Wotton's Life of Buckingham.

It did not run out in voice or indecent eruptions, but filled the soul, as God the universe, silently and without noise. South.

5. Efflorescence; pustules.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions. Shakspeare's Henry iv.
An eruption of humours, in any part, is not cured merely by outward applications, but by alterative medicines. Government of the Tongue.
Unripe fruits are apt to occasion foul eruptions
on the skin. Arbuthnot.

ERUPTIVE. adj. [eruptus, Lat.] Bursting forth.

and escalops, curiously indented round the edges.
Ray.

ESCAPADE. n. f. [French.] Irregular motion of a horse.

He with a graceful pride,
While his rider every hand survey'd,
Sprung loose, and flew into an escapade;
Not moving forward, yet with every bound
Pressing, and seeming still to quit his ground.
Dryden.

TO ESCAPE. v. a. [echaper, French.]

1. To obtain exemption from; to obtain security from; to fly; to avoid.

Since we cannot escape the pursuit of passions, and perplexity of thoughts, there is no way left but to endeavour all we can either to subdue or divert them. Temple.

Had David died sooner, how much trouble had he escaped, which by living he endured in the rebellion of his son? Wake.

2. To pass unobserved by one.

Men are blinded with ignorance and error:
many things may escape them, in many they may be deceived. Hooker.

'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick flight escape. Denham.

The reader finds out those beauties of propriety in thought and writing, which escaped him in the tumult and hurry of representing. Dryd.
TO ESCAPE. v. n. To fly; to get out of danger; to avoid punishment or harm.

Benhadad, the king of Syria, escaped on horse.
Chronicles.

They escaped all safe to land. Acts.

Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. Genesis.

Whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her,
but the sinner shall be taken by her. Eccel.

He might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

To convince us that there was no way to escape
by climbing up to the mountains, he assures us that the highest were all covered. Woodward.

Laws are not executed, men of virtue are disgraced, and murderers escape. Watts' Logick.

ESCAPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flight; the act of getting out of danger.

I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Psalms.

He enjoyed neither his escape nor his honour long; for he was hewn in pieces. Hayward.

Men of virtue have had extraordinary escapes out of such dangers as have enclosed them, and which have seemed inevitable. Addison.

2. Excursion; sally.

We made an escape, not so much to seek our own,
As to be instruments of your safety. Denham.

3. [In law.] Violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint. For example, if the sheriff, upon a capias directed unto him, takes a person, and endeavours to carry him to gaol, and he in the way, either by violence or by flight, breaks from him, this is called an escape. Cowell.

4. Excuse; subterfuge; evasion.

St. Paul himself did not despise to remember whatsoever he found agreeable to the word of God among the heathen, that he might take from them all escape by way of ignorance.
Raleigh.

5. Sally; flight; irregularity.

Thousand escapes of wit,
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fancies. Shakspeare.
Loose escapes of love. Milton.

6. Oversight; mistake.

In transcribing there would be less care taken, as the language was less understood, and so the escapes less subject to observation. Brerewood.

ESCARGATOIRE. n. f. [French.] A nursery of snails.

At the Capuchins I saw escargatoires, which I took the more notice of, because I do not remember to have met with any thing of the same kind in other countries. It is a square place boarded in, and filled with a vast quantity of large snails, that are esteemed excellent food, when they are well dressed. Addison.

ESCHALOT. n. f. [French.] Pronounced shallot.

Eschalots are now from France become an English plant, managed after the same manner as garlick; only they are to be set earlier, and taken up as soon as the leaves begin to wither, lest the winter kills them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ESCHAR. n. f. [ἰσχάρα.] A hard crust or scar made by hot applications.

When issues are made, or bones exposed, the eschar should be cut out immediately. Sharp.

ESCHAROTICK. adj. [from eschar.] Cauftick; having the power to sear or burn the flesh.

ESCHA'ROTICK. n. f. A caustick application.

An eschar was made by the cathartick, which we thrust off, and continued the use of escharoticks. Wifeman's Surgery.

Escharoticks applied of ash-ashes, or blistering plaster. Floyer.

ESCHE'AT. n. f. [from the French escheoir.] Any lands, or other profits, that fall to a lord within his manor by forfeiture, or the death of his tenant, dying without heir general or especial. Escheat is also used sometimes for the place in which the king, or other lord, has escheats of his tenants. Thirdly, escheat is used for a writ, which lies where the tenant, having estate of fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superiour lord, dies seised without heir general or especial. Cowell.

If the king's ordinary courts of justice do not protect the people, if he have no certain revenue or escheats, I cannot say that such a country is conquered. Davies on Ireland.

To ESCH'AT. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall to the lord of the manor by forfeiture, or for want of heirs.

In the last general wars there, I knew many good freeholders executed by martial law, whose lands were thereby saved to their heirs, which should have otherwise eschated to her majesty. Spenser on Ireland.

He would forbear to alienate any of the forfeited eschated lands in Ireland, which should accrue to the crown by reason of this rebellion. Clarendon.

ESCHEA'TOR. n. f. [from escheat.] An officer that observes the escheats of the king in the county whereof he is escheator, and certifies them into the exchequer. Cowell.

At a Bartholomew fair at London, an escheator of the city arrested a clothier, and seized his goods. Camden's Remains.

To ESCH'W. v. a. [escheoir, old Fr.] To fly; to avoid; to shun; to decline. A word almost obsolete.

She was like a young fawn, who, coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed. Sidney.

So let us, which this change of weather view,
Change eke our minds, and former lives amend;
The old year's fins forepast let us eschew,
And fly the faults with which we did offend. Spenser.

He who obeys, destruction shall eschew;
A wise man knows both when and what to do. Sandys.

Of virtue and vice, men are universally to practise the one, and eschew the other. Atterbury.

ESCO'RT. n. f. [escort, French.] Convey; guard from place to place.

To ESCO'RT. v. a. [escorter, French.] To convey; to guard from place to place.

ESCOT. n. f. [French.] A tax paid in boroughs and corporations toward the support of the community, which is called scot and lot.

To ESCO'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay a man's reckoning; to support.

What, are they children? Who maintains them? How are they escoted? Shakspeare.

ESCO'UT. n. f. [escouter, French.] Listeners or spies; persons sent for intelligence. Now scout.

They were well entrenched, having good scout abroad, and sure watch within. Hayward.

ESCRITOIR. n. f. [French.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing. Pronounced scritore.

ESCU'AGE. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.]

Escuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l.* per annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that cenfus equestris is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this escuage uncertain is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services. Cowell.

E'sCULENT. adj. [esculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great whisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

E'sCULENT. n. f. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater. Bacon's Nat. History.

ESCU'TCHEON. n. f. [A French word, from the Latin scutum, leather; and hence cometh our English word buckler, lepe in the old Saxon signifying leather, and buck or bock a buck or stag; of whose skins, quilted close together with horn or hard wood, the ancient Britons made their shields. Peacham.] The shield of the family; the picture of the ensigns armorial.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, and some remembrance perhaps upon the escutcheon. Bacon.

We will pass over the escutcheons of the tribes of Israel, as they are usually described in the maps of Canaan. Brown.

ESPA'LIER. n. f. Trees planted and cut so as to join.

Plant your fairest tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Behold Villario's ten years toil complete,
His harbours darken, his espaliers meet. Pope.

ESPA'RCET. n. f. [medica, or trifolium, Latin.] A kind of sainfoin. Mortimer.

ESPE'CIAL. adj. [specialis, Latin.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up. Daniel's Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especially should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline. Hooker.

Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius? Shakspeare.

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especially the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come, and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind. Burnet.

ESPERANCE. n. f. [French.] Hope. Not used.

To be worst,

The lowest, most dejected things of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear. Shakspeare.

Yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears. Shakspeare.

ESP'PAL. n. f. [French, from espier.] A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not used.

Those four garrisons, issuing forth at such convenient times as they shall have intelligence, or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another. Spenser on Ireland.

As he march'd along,

By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops. Shakspeare.

'Spials have inform'd me,

The English in the suburbs close entrench'd,
Went through a secret grate. Shakspeare.

She had some secret espials to look abroad for graceful youths, to make Plantagenets. Bacon.

ESPLANADE. n. f. [French.] In fortification, the same with the glacis of the counterescarp originally; but now it is taken for the empty space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of the town. Harris.

ESPO'USAL. adj. Used in the act of espousing or betrothing.

The ambassador put his leg, stript naked to the knee, between the espousal sheets; that the ceremony might amount to a consummation. Bacon.

ESPO'USALS. n. f. without a singular. [sponsalia, Latin; espous, French.] The act of contracting or affiancing a man and woman to each other; the act or ceremony of betrothing.

To ESPO'USE. v. a. [espouser, French.]

1. To contract or betroth to another: with to.

Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me. 2 Samuel.

2. Or with.

He had received him as a suppliant, protected him as a person fled for refuge, and espoused him with his kinswoman. Bacon.

3. To marry; to wed.

Lavinia will I make my emperess,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse. Shakspeare.

With flowers, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs,
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They soon espous'd; for they with ease were join'd,

Who were before contracted in the mind. Dryden.

If her fire approves,
Let him espouse her to the peer the loves. Pope.

4. To adopt; to take to himself.

In gratitude unto the duke of Bretagne, for his former favours, he espoused that quarrel, and declared himself in aid of the duke. Bacon.

5. To maintain; to defend.

Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars, but also espoused the several parties in a visible corporeal descent. Dryden.

The city, army, court, espouse my cause. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments either to make good their beauty, or varnish over their deformity. Locke.

The righteousness of the best cause may be overbalanced by the iniquities of those that espouse it. Smalridge.

The cause of religion and goodness, which is the cause of God, is ours by descent, and we are doubly bound to espouse it. Atterbury.

TO ESPY'. v. a. [espier, French.]

1. To see things at a distance.

Few there are of so weak capacity but publick evils they easily espy; fewer so patient as not to complain, when the grievous inconveniencies thereof work sensible smart. Hooker.

2. To discover a thing intended to be hid.

He who before he was espied was afraid, after being perceived was ashamed, now being hardly rubbed upon, left both fear and shame, and was moved to anger. Sidney.

3. To see unexpectedly.

As one of them opened his sack, he espied his money. Genesis.

4. To discover as a spy.

Moses sent me to espy out the land, and I brought him word again. Joshua.

TO ESPY'. v. n. To watch; to look about.

Stand by the way and espy; ask him that fleeth what is done? Jeremiah.

ESQUIRE. n. f. [escuer, French.] See SQUIRE.

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.

2. A title of dignity, next in degree below a knight.

Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights bachelor, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipful calling, as the serjeant chirurgeon, serjeant of the ewry, master cooke, &c. such as are created esquires by the king with a collar of S S, of silver, as the heralds and serjeants at arms. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superior office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse comitatus. He who is a justice of the peace has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for poll-money, were ranked among esquires. Blount.

What, are our English dead?

—Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam esquire.

Shakspeare's Henry v.

TO ESSAY. v. a. [essayer, French.]

1. To attempt; to try; to endeavour.

While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.
No conquest she, but o'er herself desir'd;
No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd. Pope.

2. To make experiment of.

3. To try the value and purity of metals.

The standard in our mint being now settled, the rules and methods of essaying suited to it should remain unvariable. Locke.

ESSAY. n. f. [from the verb. The accent is used on either syllable.]

1. Attempt; endeavour.

Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
Yours to preserve a friend, and mine to praise. Smith.

2. A loose sally of the mind; an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.

My essays, of all my other works, have been most current. Bacon.

Yet modestly he does his work survey.

And calls his finish'd poem an essay.

Poem to Roscommon.

3. A trial; an experiment.

This treatise prides itself in no higher a title than that of an essay, or imperfect attempt at a subject. Glanville.

He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue. Shakspeare.

Repetitions wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryden.

ESSENCE. n. f. [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in winter has an essence; in summer it has existence also. Watts.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;

Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;

Another faith, the elements conspire,

And to her essence each doth give a part. Darvies.

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. More's Divine Dialogues.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular christian man. Hooker.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences

Can perish. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends; as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakspeare.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope.

TO ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers. Addison.

ESSENTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Beniley.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general
Than courage. Denham's Sophy.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtly elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Arbuthnot.

ESSENTIAL. n. f.

1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce To nothing this essential. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Nature; first or constituent principles.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature,
and eaten into his very essentials. South.

3. The chief point; that which is in any respect of great importance.

ESSENTIALLY. adv. [essentialiter, Lat.]

By the constitution of nature; really; according to the true state of things.

He that loves himself,

Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

Body and spirit are essentially divided, though not locally distant. Glanville.

All sin essentially is, and must be mortal. South.

Knowledge is that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raises one man above another. Addison's Guardian.

ESSO'INE. n. f. [of the French essonniè, or exonniiè.]

1. He that has his presence forborn or excused upon any just cause: as sickness.

2. Allegement of an excuse for him that is summoned, or sought for, to appear and answer to an action real, or to perform suit to a court-baron, upon just cause of absence. Cowell.

3. Excuse; exemption.

From every work he challenged essoin,
For contemplation sake; yet otherwise
His life he led in lawless riotise. Fairy Queen.

TO ESTABLISH. v. a. [etabli, Fr.]

1. To settle firmly; to fix unalterably.

He may establish thee to-day for a people unto himself. Deuteronomy.

I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant. Genesis.

The Normans never obtained this kingdom by such a right of conquest, as did or might alter the established laws of the kingdom. Hale.

2. To settle in any privilege or possession; to confirm.

Soon after the rebellion broke out, the presbyterian sect was established in all its forms by an ordinance of the lords and commons. Swift.

3. To make firm; to ratify.
Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void. Numbers.
4. To fix or settle in an opinion.
So were the churches established in the faith. Acts.
5. To form or model.
He appointed in what manner his family should be established. Clarendon.
6. To found; to build firmly; to fix immovably. A sense not in use.
For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Psalms.
7. To make a settlement of any inheritance. A sense not in use.
We will establish our estate upon Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter The prince of Cumberland. Shakspeare's Macb.
- ESTABLISHER. n. f. [from establish.]
He who establishes.
I reverence the holy fathers as divine establishers of faith. L. Digby.
- ESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from establish; établissement, French.]
1. Settlement; fixed state.
All happy peace, and goodly government, Is settled there in sure establishment. F. Queen.
  2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.
He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establishment. Bacon.
  3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government or family.
Now come into that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty. Spenser.
  4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.
The sacred order to which you belong, and even the establishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain. Atterbury.
  5. Allowance; income; salary.
His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperor's revenue, might gradually lessen your establishment. Swift.
  6. Settled or final rest.
Whilst we set up our hopes and establishment here, we do not seriously consider that God has provided another and better place for us. Wake.
- ESTATE. n. f. [estat, French.]
1. The general interest; the business of the government; the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written state.
Many times the things adduced to judgment may be meum & tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may reach to point of estate: I call matters of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. Bacon's Essays.
  2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.
Thanks to giddy chance,
She cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryd.
  3. Condition; circumstances in general.
Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them. Locke.
  4. Fortune; possession; generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.
She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul;
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.
  5. Rank; quality.

- Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties. Sidney.
6. A person of high rank. Disused.
She is a dutchess, a great estate. Latimer.
Herod, on his birth-day, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee. Mark.
- To ESTATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To settle as a fortune.
Why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither?
—A contract of true love to celebrate,
And some donation freely to estate
On the blest lovers. Shakspeare's Tempest.
- To ESTEEM. v. a. [estimer, French; estimo, Latin.]
1. To set a value whether high or low upon any thing.
The worth of all men by their end esteem,
And then due praise, or due reproach them yield. Spenser.
A knowledge in the works of nature they honour, and esteem highly profound wisdom; howbeit this wisdom saveth not. Hooker.
I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and esteemed riches nothing in comparison of her. Wisdom.
  2. To compare; to estimate by proportion.
Besides, those single forms she doth esteem,
And in her balance doth their values try. Davies.
  3. To prize; to rate high; to regard with reverence.
Who would not be loved more, though he were esteemed less? Dryden.
  4. To hold in opinion; to think; to imagine.
One man esteemeth one day above another;
another esteemeth every day alike. Romans.
- To ESTEEM. v. n. To consider as to value: with of.
Many would little esteem of their own lives, yet for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld from that heinous crime. Spenser.
- ESTEEM. n. f. [from the verb.] High value; reverential regard.
Who can see,
Without esteem for virtuous poverty,
Severe Fabritius, or can cease to admire
The ploughman consul in his coarse attire? Dryden's Æneid.
Both those poets lived in much esteem with good and holy men in orders. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
I am not uneasy that many, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me. Pope.
- ESTEEEMER. n. f. [from esteem.] One that highly values; one that sets a high rate upon any thing.
This might instruct the proudest esteemer of his own parts, how useful it is to talk and consult with others. Locke.
- ESTIMABLE. adj. [French.]
1. Valuable; worth a large price.
A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable or profitable
As flesh, of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shakspeare.
  2. Worthy of esteem; worthy of some degree of honour and respect.
A lady said of her two companions, that one was more amiable, the other more estimable.
You lost one who gave hopes of being, in time, every thing that was estimable and good. Temple.
- ESTIMABLENESS. n. f. [from estimable.]
The quality of deserving regard.
- To ESTIMATE. v. a. [estimo, Latin.]
1. To rate; to adjust the value of; to judge of any thing by its proportion to something else.

- When a man shall sanctify his house to the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. Leviticus.
It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke.
2. To calculate; to compute.
ESTIMATE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Computation; calculation.
Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss, I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height assigned by Moses. Woodward.
  2. Value.
I'd love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
The treasure of my loins. Shakspeare.
  3. Valuation; assignment of proportional value; comparative judgment.
The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and a private life, is to try both. L. Esrange.
Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions. Addison's Spectator.
- ESTIMATION. n. f. [from estimate.]
1. The act of adjusting proportional value.
If a man should sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field, the estimation shall be according to the seed. Leviticus.
  2. Calculation; computation.
  3. Opinion; judgment.
In our own estimation we account such particulars more worthy than those that are already tried and known. Bacon.
  4. Esteem; regard; honour.
Crimes there were laid to his charge many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit with men. Hooker.
Of your brace of unprizable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual. Shakspeare.
I know the gentleman
To be of worth and worthy estimation,
And not without desert so well reputed. Shakspeare.
I shall have estimation among the multitude, and honour with the elders. Wisdom.
A plain reason of the publick honours due to the magistrate is, that he may be in due estimation and reverence. Atterbury.
- ESTIMATIVE. adj. [from estimate.] Having the power of comparing and adjusting the preference.
We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetite or aversion, and loco-motive faculty answering the will. Hale.
The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall, which indeed belongs to the object. Boyle.
- ESTIMATOR. n. f. [from estimate.] A settler of rates; a computist.
- ESTIVAL. adj. [estivus, Latin.]
1. Pertaining to the summer.
  2. Continuing for the summer.
- ESTIVATION. n. f. [estivatio, Latin.]
The act of passing the summer.
A grotto is a place of shade, or estivation. Bacon's Essays.
- ESTOPEL. n. f. [law term.] Such an act as bars any legal process.
- ESTOVERS. n. f. [law term.] Necessaries allowed by law.
- ESTRADE. n. f. [French; stratum, Latin.] An even or level space. Dis.

To ESTRANGE. v. a. [estranger, Fr.]

1. To keep at a distance; to withdraw.
Had we not only cut off their corruptions, but also estranged ourselves from them in things indifferent, who seeth not how greatly prejudicial this might have been to so good a cause? Hooker.
They know it is our custom of simple reading, not for conversion of infidels estranged from the house of God, but for instruction of men baptized, bred, and brought up in the bosom of the church. Hooker.

See, she weeps;

Thinks me unkind, or false, and knows not why
I thus estrangle my person from her bed Dryden.

2. To alienate; to divert from its original use or possessor.

They have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods. Jeremiah.

3. To alienate from affection; to turn from kindness to malevolence or in difference.

How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me. Shaksp.
Adam, estrang'd in look, and alter'd style,
Speech intermitted, thus to Eve renew'd. Milton.
I came to grieve a father's heart estrang'd;
But little thought to find a mistress chang'd. Dryden.

I do not know, to this hour, what it is that has estranged him from me. Pope.

4. To withdraw or withhold.
We must estrangle our belief from every thing which is not clearly and distinctly evidenced. Glanville's Scepis.

ESTRANGEMENT. n. f. [from estrangle.]
Alienation; distance; removal; voluntary abstraction.

Desires, by a long estrangement from better things, come at length perfectly to loath, and fly off from them. South.

ESTRAPADE. n. f. [French.] The defence of a horse that will not obey, who to get rid of his rider, rises mightily before; and while his forehead is yet in the air, yerks furiously with his hind legs. Farrier's Dict.

ESTRE'ATE. n. f. [extrañum, Latin.] The true copy of an original writing: for example, of amerciaments or penalties, set down in the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer, of every man for his offence. A law term. Cowell.

ESTRE'PEMENT. n. f. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the reversion. Cowell.

ESTRICH. n. f. [commonly written ostrich; struthiocamelus.] The largest of birds.

To be furious,

Is to be frighted out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shaksp.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor estrich her rare plumes. Sandys.

ESTUANCE. n. f. Heat; warmth. A word rarely found.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalcescence, and regulated estuanee from wine. Brown.

ESTUARY. n. f. [astuarium, Lat.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.

To ESTUATE. v. a. [astuo, Latin.] To swell and fall reciprocally; to boil; to be in a state of violent commotion. Diñ.

ESTUA'TION. n. f. [from astuo, Latin.] The state of boiling; reciprocation of rise and fall; agitation; commotion.

Rivers and lakes that want fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited into estuations; therefore some seas flow higher than others. Brown.

The motion of the will is accompanied with a sensible commotion of the spirits, and an estuation of the blood. Norris.

ESTURE. n. f. [astus, Latin.] Violence; commotion.

The seas retain

Not only their outrageous esture there,
But supernatural mischief they expire. Chapman.

ESURIENT. adj. [esuriens, Latin.] Hungry; voracious. Diñ.

ESURINE. adj. [esurio, Latin.] Corroding; eating.

Over much piercing is the air of Hampstead, in which sort of air there is always something esurine and acid. Wiseman.

ETC. A contraction of the two Latin words et cetera, which signifies, and so on; and the rest; and others of the like kind.

To ETCH. v. a. [etzen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its backside tintured with white lead, will, by running over the stricken out lines with a stiff, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.

2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for eke.]

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.

3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forward toward one side.

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

ETCH. n. f. A country word of which I know not the meaning.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer.

Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ETER'NAL. adj. [eternus, Latin.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge. Deuter.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal? Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives.

—But in them nature's copy's not eternal.

Shakspere.

4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.
Burnt off rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.

5. Unchangeable.
Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryden.

ETER'NAL. n. f. [eternel, French.] One of the appellations of the Godhead.

That law whereby the Eternal himself doth work. Hooker.

The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray;
Hung out of heav'n his golden scales. Milton.

ETER'NALIST. n. f. [eternus, Latin.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.

I would ask the eternalist what mark is there that they could expect to desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this? Burnet.

To ETER'NALIZE. v. a. [from eternal.]
To make eternal. Diñ.

ETER'NALLY. adv. [from eternal.]

1. Without beginning or end.

2. Unchangeably; invariably.

That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case. South.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.

Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addis.

ETER'NE. adj. [eternus, Latin.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

The Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eternae. Shakspere.

ETER'NITY. n. f. [eternitas, Latin.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pour'd out

Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Crashaw.

Thy immortal rhyme
Makes up this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Cowley.
By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss,
Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milton.
Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison.

To ETER'NIZE. v. a. [eterno, Latin.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness,
And immortality: that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well befits all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortal book of fame
To be eternized, that fame to haunt: Fairy Q.

I might relate of thousands, and their names
Eternize here on earth; but those elect Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n, Seek not the praise of men. Milton.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own.

Temple.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Creecb seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove hath eterniz'd the glory of his love.

Creecb.

E'THER. n. f. [ether, Latin; αιθερ.]

1. An element more fine and subtle than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another.

Newton.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union.

Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.

Dryden.

ETHE'REAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.

Man feels me, when I prefs th' ethereal plains.

Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go, heav'nly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore.
Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heav'n,

Ethereal virtues. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the ethereal happiness and employment.

Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human; angel, man.

Pope.

ETHE'REOUS. adj. [from ether.] Formed of ether; heavenly.

Behold the bright surface

Of this ethereous mould, whereon we stand.

Milt.

E'THICAL. adj. [ηθικος.] Moral; treating on morality.

E'THICALLY. adv. [from ethical.] According to the doctrines of morality.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but christianly of the faults of the tongue.

Government of the Tongue.

E'THICK. adj. [ηθικος.] Moral; delivering precepts of morality. Whence Pope entitled part of his works Ethick Epistles.

E'THICKS. n. f. without the singular. [ηθικη.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

For of all moral virtues, she was all
That ethicks speak of virtues cardinal.

Donne.

I will never set politicks against ethicks; for true ethicks are but as a handmaid to divinity and religion.

Bacon.

Perfius professes the stoick philosophy; the most generous amongst all the sects who have given rules of ethicks.

Dryden.

If the atheists would live up to the ethicks of Epicurus himself, they would make few or no profelytes from the christian religion.

Bentley.

E'THICK. adj. [εθικος.] Heathen; pagan; not Jewish; not christian.

Such contumely as the ethnick world durst not offer him, is the peculiar insolence of degenerated christians.

Government of the Tongue.

I shall begin with the agreement of profane, whether Jewish or ethnick, with the sacred writings.

Greuv.

E'THICKS. n. f. Heathens; not Jews; not christians.

This first Jupiter of the ethicks was then the same Cain, the son of Adam.

Raleigh.

ETHOLOGICAL. adj. [ηθολογος and λογος.] Treating of morality.

ETIOLOGY. n. f. [αιτιολογια.] An account of the causes of any thing, generally of a distemper.

I have not particulars enough to enable me to enter into the etiology of this distemper.

Arbuth.

ETYMOLOGICAL. adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation.

Locke.

ETYMOLOGIST. n. f. [from etymology.] One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

ETYMOLOGY. n. f. [ετυμολογια, Latin; ετυμο; and λογος.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colligation of the body, which acceptation its etymology implies.

Harvey.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and construe them by dictionary, is wretchedly ridiculous.

Collier's View of the Stage.

Pelvis is used by comick writers for a looking-glass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelvidera will signify a lady who looks in her glass.

Addison's Spectator.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark.

Watts.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

E'TYMON. n. f. [ετυμον.] Origin; primitive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw; from whence they call himmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue.

Peacham.

To EVA'CATE. v. a. [vaco, Latin.] To empty out; to throw out.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate venene bodies, or to evacuate them.

Harvey on the Plague.

To EVA'CUATE. v. a. [evacuo, Lat.]

1. To make empty; to clear.

There is no good way of prevention but by evacuating clean, and emptying the church.

Hooker.

We tried how far the air would manifest its gravity in so thin a medium, as we could make in our receiver, by evacuating it.

Boyle.

2. To throw out as noxious, or offensive.
3. To void by any of the excretory passages.

Boerhaave gives an instance of a patient, who by a long use of whey and water, and garden fruits, evacuated a great quantity of black matter, and recovered his senses.

Arbuthnot.

4. To make void; to evacuate; to nullify; to annul.

The defect, though it would not evacuate a marriage, after cohabitation and actual consummation; yet it was enough to make void a contract.

Bacon's Henry VII.

If the prophecies recorded of the Messiah are not fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, it is impossible to know when a prophecy is fulfilled, and when not, in any thing or person whatsoever, which would utterly evacuate the use of them.

South.

5. To quit; to withdraw from out of a place.

As this neutrality was never observed by the emperor, so he never effectually evacuated Catalonia.

Swift.

EVA'CUANT. n. f. [evacuans, Latin.] Medicine that procures evacuation by any passage.

EVACUATION. n. f. [from evacuate.]

1. Such emissions as leave a vacancy; discharge.

Consider the vast evacuations of men that England hath had by assistances lent to foreign kingdoms.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Papery hath not been able to re-establish itself in any place, after provision made against it, by utter evacuation of all Romish ceremonies.

Hooker.

3. The practice of emptying the body by physick.

The usual practice of physick among us, turns in a manner wholly upon evacuation, either by bleeding, vomit, or some purgation.

Temple.

4. Discharges of the body by any vent natural or artificial.

To EVA'DE. v. a. [evado, Latin.]

1. To elude; to escape by artifice or stratagem.

In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannick power: if he evade us there, Inforce him with his envy to the people.

Shaksp.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade

The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be foretall'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

He might evade the accomplishment of these afflictions he now gradually endureth.

Brown.

2. To avoid; to decline by subterfuge.

Our question thou evad'st; how did'st thou dare
To break hell bounds?

Dryden.

3. To escape or elude by sophistry.

They are but the fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindictive spirit. Howel.

Evaporations are at some times greater, according to the greater heat of the sun; so wherever they alight again in rain, 'tis superior in quantity to the rain of colder seasons. Woodward.

2. The act of attenuating matter, so as to make it fume away.

Those waters, by rarefaction and evaporation, ascended. Raleigh.

3. [In pharmacy.] An operation by which liquids are spent or driven away in steams, so as to leave some part stronger, or of a higher consistence than before. Quincy.

EVA'SION. n. f. [evasum, Latin.] Excuse; subterfuge; sophistry; artifice; artful means of eluding or escaping.

We are too well acquainted with those answers; But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions. Shakspeare.

Him, after all disputes,
Forc'd I absolve: all my evasions vain,
And reasonings, though through mazes, lead me still

But to my own conviction. Milton.

In vain thou striv'st to cover shame with shame;
Thou by evasions thy crime uncover'st more. Milton.

EVA'SIVE. adj. [from evade.]

1. Practising evasion; elusive.

Thus he, though conscious of th' ethereal guest,
Answer'd evasive of the sly request. Pope.

2. Containing an evasion; sophistical; dishonestly artful.

EVA'SIVELY. adv. [from evasive.] By evasion; elusively; sophistically.

EUCHARIST. n. f. [ευχαριστια.] The act of giving thanks; the sacramental act in which the death of our Redeemer is commemorated with a thankful remembrance; the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

Himself did better like of common bread to be used in the eucharist. Hooker.

Some receive the sacrament as a means to procure great graces and blessings, others as an eu- charist and an office of thanksgiving for what they have received. Taylor.

EUCHARISTICAL. adj. [from eucharist.]

1. Containing acts of thanksgiving.

The latter part was eucharistical, which began at the breaking and blessing of the bread. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It would not be amiss to put it into the eucharistical part of our daily devotions: we praise thee, O God, for our limbs and senses. Ray.

2. Relating to the sacrament of the supper of the Lord.

EUCHOLOG. n. f. [ευχολογία.] A formula of prayers.

EU'CRASY. n. f. [ευκρασια.] An agreeable well proportioned mixture of qualities, whereby a body is said to be in a good state of health. Quincy.

EVE. } n. f. [æfen, Saxon; avend, or E'VEN. } avond, Dutch.]

1. The close of the day; the latter part of the day; the interval between bright light and darkness.

They, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn 'till even fought,
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument. Shakspeare.

When the sun's orb both even and morn is bright,

Then let no fear of storms thy mind affright. May's Virgil.

Such sights as youthful poets dream
On summer eves by haunted stream. Milton.

O, nightingale, that on yon bloomy stray
Watblest at eve, when all the woods are still. Milton.

Th' unerring sun by certain signs declares,
What the late ev'n, or early morn prepares. Dryden's Virgil.

Winter, oft at eve, resumes the breeze, Chills the pale morn. Thomson's Spring.

2. The vigil or fast to be observed before a holyday. In this sense only eve is used, not even.

Let the immediate preceding day be kept as the eve to this great feast. Duppa.

E'VEN. adj. [æfen, Saxon; even, Dutch; aquus, Latin.]

1. Level; not rugged; not unequal; smooth as opposed to rough.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow. Dryden.

The present face of Rome is much more even and level than it was formerly. Addison on Italy.

The superficies of such plates are not even, but have many cavities and swellings, which, how shallow so ever, do a little vary the thickness of the plate. Newton's Opticks.

2. Uniform; equal to itself.

Lay the rough paths of peevish nature ev'n,
And open in each heart, a little heav'n. Prior.

3. Level with; parallel to.

That the net may be even to the midst of the altar. Exodus.

And shall lay thee even with the ground. Luke.

4. Not having inclination any way; nor leaning to any side.

He was
A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

5. Not having any part higher or lower than the other.

When Alexander demanded of one what was the fittest seat of his empire, he laid a dry hide before him, and desired him to set his foot on one side thereof; which being done, all the other parts of the hide did rise up; but when he did set his foot in the middle, all the other parts lay flat and even. Davies.

6. Equal on both sides; fair; not favouring either.

- Upheld by me, yet once more he shall stand
On even ground against his mortal foe. Milton.
7. Without any thing owed, either good or ill; out of debt.
We reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you;
Henceforth be earls. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
I will be even with thee, doubt it not. Shaksp.
I do confess
The blind Jaf's pow'r, while he inhabits there;
But I'll be ev'n with him nevertheless. Suckling.
In taking revenge, a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing it over, he is superior.
Bacon's Essays.
- Even* reckoning makes lasting friends: and the way to make reckonings even is to make them often. South.
- The publick is always even with an author who has not a just deference for them: the contempt is reciprocal. Addison.
- The true reason of this strange doctrine was to be even with the magistrate, who was against them; and they resolved at any rate to be against him. Atterbury.
8. Calm; not subject to elevation or depression; not uncertain.
Desires compos'd, affections ever ev'n,
Tears that delight, and sighs that waft to heav'n.
Pope.
9. Capable to be divided into equal parts;
not odd.
Let him tell me whether the number of the stars be even or odd. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
What verity there is in that numeral conceit in the lateral division of man by even and odd, as-cribing the odd unto the right side, and even unto the left. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- To E'VEN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To make even.
  2. To make out of debt; to put in a state in which either good or ill is fully repaid.
Nothing can, or shall content my soul,
'Till I am evened with him wife for wife. Shaksp.
  3. To level; to make level.
This temple Xerxes evened with the soil, which Alexander is said to have repaired. Raleigh.
Beat, roll, and mow carpet-walks and cammomille; for now the ground is supple, and it will even all inequalities.  Evelyn.
- To E'VEN. v. n. To be equal to. Now disused.
A like strange observation taketh place here as at Stonehenge, that a redoubled numbering never eveneth with the first. Carew.
- E'VEN. adv. [often contracted to ev'n.]
1. A word of strong assertion; verily.
Even so did those Gauls possess the coasts.
Spenser's Ireland.
Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish; not fierce and terrible Only in strokes. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
And, in a word, yea even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakspeare.
It is not much that the good man ventures;
after this life, if there be no God, he is as well as the bad; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unspeakable and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery.
Tillotson.
He might even as well have employed his time,
as some princes have done, in catching moles.
Atterbury.
  2. Notwithstanding; though it was so that.
All I can say for those passages is, that I knew they were bad enough to please even when I wrote them. Dryden.
  3. Likewise; not only so, but also.
The motions of all the lights of heaven might afford measures of time, if we could number them; but most of those motions are not evident,

- and the great lights are sufficient, and serve also to measure even the motions of those others. Holder.
Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace.
Pope.
4. So much as.
Books give the same turn to our thoughts that company does to our conversation, without loading our memories, or making us even sensible of the change. Swift.
5. A word of exaggeration in which a secret comparison is implied: as, even the great, that is, the great like the mean.
Nor death itself can wholly wash your stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains.
Dryden.
- I have made several discoveries which appear new, even to those who are versed in critical learning. Addison's Spectator.
6. A term of concession.
Since you refined the notion, and corrected the malignity, I shall ev'n let it pass. Collier.
- EVENH'ANDED. adj. [even and hand.]
Impartial; equitable.
Evenhanded justice
Returns th' ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
- E'VENING. n. s. [æpen, Saxon; avend, Dutch.] The close of the day; the beginning of night.
I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more. Shakspeare.
The devil is now more laborious than ever, the long day of mankind drawing towards an evening, and the world's tragedy and time near at an end.
Raleigh's History.
Mean time the sun descended from the skies,
And the bright evening star began to rise.
Dryden's Æneid.
It was the sacred rule among the Pythagoreans, that they should every evening thrice run over the actions and affairs of the day. Watts.
- E'VENLY. adv. [from even.]
1. Equally; uniformly; in an equipoise.
In an infinite chaos nothing could be formed;
no particles could convene by mutual attraction;
for every one there must have infinite matter around it, and therefore must rest for ever, being evenly balanced between infinite attractions.
Bentley.
  2. Levelly; without asperities.
A palish clearness, evenly and smoothly spread;
not overthin and washy, but of a pretty solid consistence. Watton.
  3. Without inclination to either side; in a posture parallel to the horizon; horizontally.
The upper face of the sea is known to be level by nature, and evenly distant from the centre, and waxes deeper and deeper the farther one faileth from the shore. Brerewood.
  4. Impartially; without favour or enmity.
You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince: it behoves you to carry yourself wisely and evenly between them both. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
- E'VENNESS. n. s. [from even.]
1. State of being even.
  2. Uniformity; regularity.
The ether most readily yieldeth to the revolutions of the celestial bodies, and the making them with that evenness and celerity is requisite in them all. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.
  3. Equality of surface; levelness.
  4. Freedom from inclination to either side;
horizontal position.
A crooked stick is not straitened, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between both. Hooker.
  5. Impartiality; equal respect.

6. Calmness; freedom from perturbation;
equanimity.
Though he appeared to relish these blessings as-much as any man, yet he bore the loss of them, when it happened, with great composure and evenness of mind. Atterbury.
- E'VENSONG. n. s. [even and song.]
1. The form of worship used in the evening.
Thee, 'chantress of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy evensong. Milton.
If a man were but of a day's life, it is well
if he last 'till evensong, and then says his compline an hour before the time. Taylor.
  2. The evening; the close of the day.
He tun'd his notes both evensong and morn.
Dryden.
- EVENTIDE. n. s. [even and tide.] The time of evening.
A swarm of gnats at eventide,
Out of the fens of Allan do arise,
Their murmuring small trumpets sounding wide.
Fairy Queen.
Isaac went out to meditate at the eventide.
Genesis.
- EVENT. n. s. [eventus, Latin.]
1. An incident; any thing that happens good or bad.
There is one event to the righteous and to the wicked. Eccles.
Oh heavy times, begetting such events!
Shakspeare's Henry VI.
  2. The consequence of an action; the conclusion; the upshot.
Two spears from Meleager's hand were sent,
With equal force but various in th' event;
The first was fix'd in earth, the second stood.
On the boar's bristled back, and deeply drank his blood. Dryden.
- To E'VENTERATE. v. a. [eventero, Lat.].
To rip up; to open by ripping the belly.
In a bear, which the hunters eventerated, or opened, I beheld the young ones, with all their parts distinct. Brown.
- E'VENTFUL. adj. [event and full.] Full of incidents; full of changes of fortune.
Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness. Shaksp. As you like it.
- To E'VENTILATE. v. n. [eventilo, Latin.]
1. To winnow; to sift out.
  2. To examine; to discuss. Diſt.
- E'VENTUAL. adj. [from event.] Happening in consequence of any thing;
consequential.
- E'VENTUALLY. adv. [from eventual.] In the event; in the last result; in the consequence.
Hermione has but intentionally, not eventually, disobliged you; and hath made your flame a better return, by restoring you your own heart.
Boyle's Seraphick Love.
- E'VER. adv. [æppe, Saxon.]
1. At any time.
Men know by this time, if ever they will know, whether it be good or evil which hath been so long retained. Hooker.
If thou hast that, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean valour, this might shew it. Shakspeare.
You serve a master who is as free from the envy of friends, as ever any king was. Bacon.
So few translations deserve praise, that I scarce
ever saw any which deserved pardon. Denham.
The most sensual man that ever was in the world never felt so delicious a pleasure as a clear conscience. Tillotson.
By repeating any idea of any length of time, as of a minute, a year, or an age, as often as we will in our own thoughts, and adding them to one another, without ever coming to the end of such addition, we come by the idea of eternity.
Locke.

2. At all times; always; without end.

God hath had ever, and ever shall have, some church visible upon the earth. Hooker.

I see things may serve long, but not serve ever. Shakspeare.

Riches endless is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor. Shakspeare's Othello.

Blinded greatness, ever in turmoil,
Still seeking happy life, makes life a toil. Daniel.
There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks,

In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell. Milton.
The inclinations of the people must ever have a great influence. Temple.

He shall ever love, and always be
The subject of my scorn and cruelty. Dryden.
Mankind is ever the same, and nothing lost out of nature, though every thing is altered. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Ever since that time Lisander has been at the house. Tatler.

Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and critic's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope.

3. For ever. Eternally; to perpetuity.

Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Locke.

We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;
And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever. A. Philips.

4. It is sometimes reduplicated.

For ever and for ever, farewell Cassius. Shaks.
I know a lord, who values no lease, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.

The meeting points the fatal lock dissolve
From the fair head for ever and for ever. Pope.

5. At one time, as ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.

So long as Guyon with her communed,
Unto the ground she cast her modest eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did dye. Fairy Queen.

The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings. L'Estrange.

He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

6. In any degree.

Let no man fear that harmful creature ever the less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.

For a mine undiscovered, neither the owner of the ground or any body else are ever the richer. Collier on Pride.

It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars. Locke.

There must be somewhere such a rank as man:
And all the question, wrangle ever so long,
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong? Pope's Essays.

7. A word of enforcement, or aggravation.

As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.

That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

They brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. Daniel.

That purse in your hand, has a twin-brother, as like him as ever he can look. Dryden.

As soon as ever the bird is dead,

Opening again, he lays his claim
To half the profit, half the fame. Prior.

The title of duke had been sunk in the family ever since the attainder of the great duke of Suffolk. Addison on Italy.

8. EVER a. [as every, that is, even ich or ever each is each one, all.] Any. This word is still retained in the Scottish dialect.

I am old, I am old.

—I love thee better than I love ever a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakspeare.

9. It is often contracted into ever.

10. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everdure, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances:

EVERBU'BLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.] Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.

Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That everbubbling spring. Crashaw.

EVERBU'RNING. adj. [ever and burning.] Unextinguished.

His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it taught;
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The everburning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.

Torture without end

Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton.

EVERDU'RING. adj. [ever and during.] Eternal; enduring without end.

Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everdure glory and termless joy. Raleigh.

Heav'n open'd wide

Her everdure gates, harmonious sound!
On golden hinges moving. Milton.

EVERGRE'EN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.

There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching palm. Milton.

The juice, when in greater plenty than can be exhaled by the sun, renders the plant evergreen. Arbutnot on Aliments.

E'VERGREEN. n. f. A plant that retains its verdure through all the seasons.

Some of the hardiest evergreens may be transplanted, especially if the weather be moist and temperate. Evelyn.

I find you are against filling an English garden with evergreens. Addison's Spectator.

EVERHO'NOURED. adj. [ever and honoured.] Always held in honour or esteem.

Mentes, an everhonoured name, of old High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd. Pope.

EVERLA'STING. adj. [ever and lasting.]

1. Lasting or enduring without end; perpetual; immortal; eternal.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not;
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:

For ever, and for ever, farewell Cassius. Shaks.
The everlasting life, both of body and soul, in that future state, whether in bliss or woe, hath been added. Hammond.

And what a trifle is a moment's breath,
Laid in a scale with everlasting death! Denham.

2. It is used of past as well as future eternity, though not so properly.

EVERLA'STING. n. f. Eternity; eternal duration whether past or future.

From everlasting to everlasting thou art God. Psalms.

We are in God through the knowledge which is had of us, and the love which is born towards us, from everlasting. Hooker.

EVERLA'STINGLY. adv. [from everlasting.] Eternally; without end.

I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more. Shaks.
Many have made themselves everlastingly ridiculous. Swift.

EVERLA'STINGNESS. n. f. [from everlasting.] Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.

Nothing could make me sooner to confess,
That this world had an everlastingness,
Than to consider that a year is run Since both this lower world's and the sun's sun Did set. Donne.

EVERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.] Living without end; immortal; eternal; incessant.

Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glist'eth bright
With burning stars and everliving fires? F. Queen.

In that he is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity. Hooker.

God's justice in the one, and his goodness in the other, is exercised for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment. Raleigh.

The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving agent. Newton.

EVERMORE. adv. [ever and more.] Always; eternally. More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, evermore, always, henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.

It govern'd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar. Fairy Queen.

Sparks by nature evermore aspire,
Which makes them now to such a highness flee. Davies.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson.

EVERO'PEN. adj. [ever and open.] Never closed; not at any time shut.

God is the great eye of the world, always watching over our actions, and has an ever-open ear to all our words. Taylor.

EVERPLEASING. adj. [ever and pleasing.] Delighting at all times; never ceasing to give pleasure.

The everpleasing Pamela was content to urge a little farther for me. Sidney.

Forsoaking Sheria's everpleasing shore,
The winds to Marathon the virgin bore. Pope.

TO EVERSE. v. a. [eversus, Latin.] To overthrow; to subvert; to destroy. Not used.

The foundation of this principle is totally everfed by the ingenious commentator upon immaterial beings. Glanville.

TO EVERT. v. a. [everto, Latin.] To destroy; to overthrow.

A process is valid, if the jurisdiction of the judge is not yet everted and overthrown. Ayliffe.

EVERWA'TCHFUL. adj. [ever and watchful.] Always vigilant.

Plac'd at the helm he sat, and mark'd the skies,
Nor clos'd in sleep his everwatchful eyes. Pope.

E'VERY. adj. [In old language everich, that is ever each; æpen ealc, Saxon.]

1. Each one of all. Every has therefore no plural signification.

He proposeth unto God their necessities, and they their own requests for relief in every of them. Hooker.

All the congregation are holy, every one of them. Numbers.

The king made this ordinance, that every twelve years there should be set forth two ships. Bacon.
The virtue and force of every of these three is shrewdly allayed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Aristotle has long since observed, how unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof for every thing, which we have for some things. Tillotson.

Every one, that has an idea of a foot, finds that he can repeat that idea, and, joining it to the former, make the idea of two feet. Locke.

From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud,
And broken lightnings flash from ev'ry cloud. Pope's Statius.

2. EVERY-WHERE. In all places; in each place.

The substance of the body of Christ was not every-where seen, nor did it every-where suffer death; every-where it could not be entombed: it is not every-where now, being exalted into heaven. Hooker.

If I send my son abroad, how is it possible to keep him from vice, which is every-where so in fashion? Locke.

'Tis no-where to be found, or every-where. Pope.

E'VERYOUNG. adj. [ever and young.]
Not subject to old age, or decaying; undecaying.

Joys everyyoung, unmix'd with pain or fear,
Fill the wide circle of th' eternal year. Pope.

E'VESDROPPER. n. f. [eves and dropper.]
Some mean fellow that skulks about a house in the night to listen.

What makes you listening there? Get farther off; I preach not to thee, thou wicked evesdropper. Dryden's Spanish Fryer.

Do but think how becoming your function it is to be disguised like a slave, and an evesdropper, under the women's windows. Dryden.

To E'VESTIGATE. v. a. [evestigo, Latin.]
To search out. DiD.

EUGH. n. f. [This word is so written by most writers; but since the original is, Saxon, or Welsh yeuon, more favours the easier orthography of yew, I have referred it thither.] A tree.

At the first stretch of both his hands he drew,
And almost joined the horns of the tough eugh. Dryden's Aeneid.

To EVICT. v. a. [evinco, Latin.]

1. To dispossess of by a judicial course.
The law of England would speedily evict them out of their possession, and therefore they held it the best policy to cast off the yoke of English law. Darby's on Ireland.

2. To take away by a sentence of law.
His lands were evicted from him. King James' Declaration.

3. To prove; to evince. Little used.

To EXICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry; to dry up. Diſt.

EXICCATION. n. f. [from exiccate.] Aridification; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley.

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE. } n. f. [This word is probably only a corruption of EXIGENCY. } exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterb.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Broome.

Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

EXIGENT. n. f. [exigens, Latin.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Preface.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakspeare uses it for any extremity. Hanmer.

Their subtle parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Harvey.

EXILE. n. f. [exilium, Latin.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life
We've led since thy exile. Shakspeare.
Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakspeare.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger,
But with a grain of day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakspeare.

2. The person banished.

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryden.
Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope.

EXILE. adj. [exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon's Natural History.

To EXILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shakspeare.

Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shakspeare.
For that offence,

Immediately we do exile him hence. Shakspeare.
They, fettered with the bonds of a long night,
lay there exiled from the eternal Providence. Wisdom.

His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd. Dryden.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate, Expel'd and exil'd. Dryden.

Fitzosborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton.

EXILIATION. n. f. [exiliatio, Latin.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt, will not take fire with noise or exiliation; and powder which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Broton.

EXILITY. n. f. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies called ephemeræ, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtility are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXIMIOUS. adj. [eximius, Lat.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Diſt.

EXINATION. n. f. [exinanitio, Latin.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his exination. Decay of Piety.

To EXIST. v. n. [existo, Latin.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity.

South.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature.

Locke.

One year is past, a different scene!

No farther mention of the dean:

Who now, alas, no more is mist

Than if he never did exist.

Swift.

EXISTENCE. } n. f. [existentia, low Lat.]

EXISTENCY. } State of being; actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existency of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existency, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it.

Hale.

The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles

At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.

Addison's Cato.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also.

Watts.

EXISTENT. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatsoever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent.

Brown.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent.

Dryden.

Woodward.

3. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually injured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for.

Hooker.

4. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories.

Addis.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.

Swift.

TO EXORBITATE. v. n. [ex and orbito, Latin.]

To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn.

Bentley.

1. To adjure by some holy name.

2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.

3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

And fry'rs, that through the wealthy regions run,

Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,

And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls.

Dryden.

EXORCISER. n. f. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits.

EXORCISM. n. f. [ἐξορκισμός.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcism?

Shakspeare.

Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms.

Harvey.

EXORCIST. n. f. [ἐξορκιστής.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits.

Acts.

2. An enchanter; a conjuror. Improperly.

Soul of Rome!

Thou, like an exorcist, had conjur'd up

My mortified spirit.

Shakspeare.

Is there no exorcist

Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?

Is't real that I see?

Shakspeare.

EXORDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Nor will I thee detain

With poets fictions, nor oppress thine ear

With circumstance, and long exordiums here.

May's Virgil.

I have been distast'd at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums.

EXORNATION. n. f. [exornatio, Latin.]

Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease.

Hooker.

Hyperbolic exornations and elegancies many much affect.

Hale.

EXOSSATED. adj. [exossatus, Latin.] Deprived of bones.

Diä.

EXOSTOSIS. n. f. [ἐξ and ὄστος.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cafes.

Quincy.

EXOSSEOUS. adj. [ex and ossa, Latin.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion.

Brown.

EXOTICK. adj. [ἐξωτικός.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestic.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

EXOTICK. n. f. A foreign plant.

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks. Addison's Guard.

To EXPA'ND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.
2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapons to the Alchoran to propagate and expand itself. Howel.

Bellerophon's horse framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid. Arbutnot on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name Expanded flies and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPA'NSE. n. f. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound
Of waters issue from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then stood unmov'd,
Pure as th' expanse of heav'n. Milton.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. f. [from expansible.]

Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPA'NSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Lat.]

Capable to be extended; capable to spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPA'NSION. n. f. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes incursions into that incomprehensible inane. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight,
Loft in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore.

EXPA'NSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastic or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glasses. Ray on the Creation.

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thomson.

To EXPA'TIATE. v. n. [expatior, Latin.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. Addison's Spectator.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;

Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground,
And walk delighted, and expatiate round. Pope.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatiates upon this custom. Broome.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense, which is active, is very improper.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself. Dryden.

To EXPE'CT. v. a. [expecto, Latin.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

We expected
Immediate dissolution. Milton.

EXPE'CTANCE. } n. f. [from expect.]
EXPE'CTANCY. }

1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakspeare's Othello.

Satyrs leave your petulance,
Or else rail upon the moon,
Your expectance is too soon;
For before the second cock
Crow, the gates will not unlock. Ben Jonson.

This blessed expectance must be now my theme. Boyle.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stay!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

2. Something expected.

There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will do. Shakspeare.

3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The expectancy and rose of the fair state. Shaksp.

Her majesty has offered concessions in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir. Swift.

EXPE'CTANT. n. f. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependence by his hopes.

They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,
My stores in riotous expence devour. Pope.

This treatise was agreeable to the whole nation, except those who had employments, or were expectants. Swift to Pope.

EXPECTATION. n. f. [expectatio, Lat.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees
Should have borne men, and expectation fainted Longing for what it had not. Shakspeare.

The rest,
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are i' th' court. Shakspeare's Macb.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Congreve.

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth. Rogers' Sermons.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. Psalms.

4. The object of happy expectation; the Messiah expected.

Now clear I understand,
What oft my steadiest thoughts have search'd in vain,
Why our great expectation should be call'd
The Seed of woman. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.

How fit it will be for you, born to great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness. Sidney.

You first came home
From travel with such hopes as made you look'd en,
By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation;
Pleas'd with your growing virtue I receiv'd you. Orway.

EXPE'CTER. n. f. [from expect.]

1. One who has hopes of something.

These are not great expecters under your administration, according to the period of governors here. Swift.

EXPERIENCE. n. f. [experientia, Latin.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.

Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden. Raleigh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
'Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that most concern
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boys immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure. Shakspeare.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

2. Wife by long practice.

To him experienc'd Nestor thus rejoin'd,
O friend! what sorrows do'st thou bring to mind!
Pope.

EXPERIENCER. n. f. One who makes trials; a practiser of experiments.

A curious experier did affirm, that the likeness of any object, if strongly enlightened, will appear to another, in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it, 'till he be dazzled by it; even after he shall have turned his eyes from it. Digby on Bodies.

EXPERIMENT. n. f. [experimentum, Lat.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wise, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments; and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Hooker.

It is good also not to try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident. Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know,
How little weight with thee my words can find.
Milton.

'Till his fall man's mind was ignorant of nothing but of sin; or, at least, it rested in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South's Sermons.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment. Watts on the Mind.

To EXPERIMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to search out by trial.

Francisco Redi experimented that no putrified flesh will of itself, if all insects be carefully kept from it, produce any. Ray on the Creation.

2. To know by experience.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

EXPERIMENTAL. adj. [from experiment.]

EXPIATION. n. f. [from expiate.]

1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove, Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats. Milton.

The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement, as christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Addison's Spectator.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Hayward.

EXPIATORY. adj. [from expiate.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.

His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice. Hooker.

EXPIATION. n. f. [expilatio, Latin.]

Robbery; the act of committing waste upon land to the loss of the heir.

EXPIRATION. n. f. [from expire.]

1. That act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast. Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon's Natural History.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The last emission of breath; death.

We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration. Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

4. Vapour; matter expired.

Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, in transiency and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

Close air is warmer than open air, as the cause of cold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger. Bacon's Natural History.

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boyle.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If 'till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shakspeare's King Lear.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

To EXPIRE. v. a. [expiro, Latin.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrails did expire. Fairy Queen.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion of inspiring and expiring air. Harvey.
This chaff'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

The fluid which is thus secreted, and expired forth along with the air, goes off in insensible parcels. Woodward.

3. To close; to conclude; to bring to an end. Obsolete.

When as time flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should render up a reck'ning of their travels. Hubbard's Tale.

To EXPIRE. v. n.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stop'd, it suddenly dies. Walton.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
As there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their oaps, Dying ere they sicken. Shakspeare.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linestocks touch, the ponderous ball expires;
The vigorous seaman every porthole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryd.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.
Shakspeare.

To EXPLA'IN. v. a. [explano, Lat.] To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe's Parergon.

You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.
Some explained the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLA'NABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted. It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness. Brown.

EXPLA'NER. n. s. [from explain.] Expofitor; interpreter; commentator.

EXPLANA'TION. n. s. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.
2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLA'NATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes. Swift.

EXPLETIVE. n. s. [expletivum, Latin.] Something used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Of the ear the open vowels tire,
While expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

Expletives, whether words or syllables, are made use of purely to supply a vacancy: do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future refiners may explode did and does. Pope.

EXPLICABLE. adj. [from explicate.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabrick of human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

To EXPLICATE. v. a. [explico, Lat.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food
For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood. Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

They do not understand that part of christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Taylor.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICA'TION. n. s. [from explicate.]

1. The act of opening, unfolding, or expanding;

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions. Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon; many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicate.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts' Logick.

EXPLICA'TOR. n. s. [from explicate.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLI'CIT. adj. [explicitus, Lat.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South's Sermons.

EXPLI'CITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposals; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expofitor, and explicitly avows it. Government of the Tongue.

To EXPLODE. v. a. [explodo, Latin.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence,
Unseen amid' the throng. Milton.

Thus was th' applause they meant,
Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milt.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscom.
There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The massy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.

EXPLO'DER. n. s. [from explode.] A hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLO'IT. n. s. [expletum, Latin, res expleta.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'it thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a close exploit of death?
Shakspeare's Richard III.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will that no exploit have done.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

How shall I relate

To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton's Paradise Lost.
He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats;
Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour

Your past exploits, and fully all your wars!
Addison's Cato.

To EXPLO'IT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden.

To EXPLO'RATE. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explore their way. Brown.

EXPLORA'TION. n. s. [from explore.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORA'TOR. n. s. [from explore.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLO'RATORY. adj. [from explore.] Searching; examining.

To EXPLO'RE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that fight endur'd not, where he stood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milt.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the war'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden's Æneid.

The mighty Stagyrte first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mæonian star. Pope.

EXPLO'REMENT. n. s. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the explorement of many, could scarce find one. Brown.

EXPLO'SION. n. s. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward's Natural History.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an æolipile: the sulphur also being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton.

With explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLO'SIVE. adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Woodward.

EXPONENT. n. f. [from expono, Lat.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraic and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT. v. a. [exporto, Latin.]

To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandise, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addison.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbutnot.

EXPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTATION. n. f. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessities, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPORTER. n. f. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [expono, expositum, Latin; exposer, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take physick, Pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And shew Heaven just. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To pass the riper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils exposed, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryd.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose.
Dryden's Virgil.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend, in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison's Spectator.

A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be exposed or rear'd as she may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine for her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison.

EXPOSITION. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbutnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbutnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation. [from expono, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shakspeare.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most found. Shakspeare.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPOSITOR. n. f. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shaksp.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not consistent unto the authority of expositors. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. South's Sermons.

Scholiasts, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [expostulo, Latin.] To canvas with another; to altercate; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some alive
I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakspeare.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION. n. f. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse
High Heav'n, and these expostulations use;
Could nature then no private woman grace,
Whom we might dare to love with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or considerately in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. f. [from expostulate.]

One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.]

Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between bounty and ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakspeare.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' th' way before thee. Shakspeare.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Therites
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shak.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots, two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Evelyn.

TO EXPOUND. v. a. [expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to show the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them, whose speech, concerning our Lord's ascension, may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.
—And this way you have well expounded it. Shakspeare.

He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself. Luke.

Those right holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but religiously expounded it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces, but ordered the countries which they then had. Raleigh.

2. To examine; to lay open: a latinism.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch with rings and lockets. Hudibras.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expound.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was
And faithfullest expounder of the laws. Dryden.

TO EXPRESS. v. a. [exprimo, expressus, Latin.]

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.
So kids and whelps their fires and dams express,
And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.
Adorn a dream, expressing human form,
The shape of him who suffer'd in the storm. Dryden.

2. To represent by any of the imitative arts; as poetry, sculpture, painting.
Each skilful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.
Less than half we find express,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.

Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.

In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down: we have nothing but words to express them by. Locke.

True wit is nature to advantage drest,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well expressed. Pope.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for drefs. Pope.
To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteemed a prophanation. Broome.

4. To show or make known in any manner.
No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately less. Prior.

5. To utter; to declare: with the reciprocal pronoun.
Mr. Phillips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.

6. To denote; to designate.
Moses and Aaron took these men expressed by their names. Numbers.

7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.
Among the watry juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, and the apple. Bacon.

8. To extort by violence, or elicit by art: a latinism.

Halters and racks cannot express from thee
More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgment waits thee. Ben Jonson.

Art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.

EXPRESS. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly alike.

Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.

There hath been some doubt whether containing in scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.

There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation; but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.

All the gazers on the skies,
Read not in fair heav'n's story
Express truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. Ben Jonson.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.

I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgment and affection, in things of the greatest moment. More's Divine Dialogues.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillington.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.

They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRESS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.

The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarendon.

As if expresses from all parts had come,
With fresh alarms threat'ning the fate of Rome. Dryden's Fiesco

Upon the first moment I was discovered, the emperor had early notice of it by an express. Gulliver's Travels.

2. A message sent.

I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.

3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.

They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logic and common sense. Norris.

EXPRESSIBLE. adj. [from express.]

1. That may be uttered or declared.

They had not only a memory and tradition of it in general, but even of several particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages, with notes of the greatest terror expressible. Woodward.

2. That may be drawn by squeezing or expression.

EXPRESSION. n. f. [from express.]

1. The act or power of representing any thing.

There is nothing comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, as with an instrument suitable to the excellency of his soul, for the communication of his thoughts. Holder on Speech.

2. The form or mode of language in which any thoughts are uttered.

But ill expression sometimes give allay
To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay. Buckingham.

The poet, to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions. Broome.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press.

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water. Bacon.

The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression: from this juice proceeds the taste. Arbuthnot on Aliments

EXPRESSIVE. adj. [from express.] Having the power of utterance or representation. With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,
And ev'ry tear in lines so mournful flows,
We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe,
O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live! Tickel.

And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flow'r,
Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r. Pope.

A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgment of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposes others to glorify him by the same observances. Rogers.

EXPRESSIVELY. adv. [from expressive.] In a clear and representative way.

EXPRESSIVENESS. n. f. [from expressive.] The power of expression, or representation by words.

The murrain has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that Virgil strained hard to outdo Lucretius. Addison.

EXPRESSLY. adv. [from express.] In direct terms; plainly; not by implication; not generally;

It doth not follow, that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular. Hooker.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must do, to the end they may be saved, are either expressly set down in scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gathered. Hooker.

Who dare cross 'em,
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly? Shakspeare.

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people, expressly against the will of their own bishop. Stillington.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument. Atterbury.

All the duties that the best political laws enjoin, as conducive to the quiet and order of social life, are expressly commanded by our religion. Rogers.

EXPRESSURE. n. f. [from express.] Now disused.]

1. Expression; utterance.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expression to. Shakspeare.

2. The form; the likeness represented.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expression of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself personated. Shakspeare.

3. The mark; the impression.

And nightly, meadow fairies, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compass in a ring:
Th' expression that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see. Shakspeare.

TO EXPROBRATE. v. a. [exprobro, Lat.] To charge upon with reproach; to impute only with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of flocks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBATION. n. f. [from exprobrate.]

Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured gold into his mouth after he was dead. Abbot.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery. South.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice: the military mound
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Philips.

TO EXPROPRIATE. v. a. [ex and proprius, Latin.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will to God, and thereby en-

EXP

trusting him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will.
Boyle's Seraphick Love.

To EXPUGN. v. a. [expugno, Latin.]

To conquer; to take by assault.

EXPUGNATION. n. f. [from expugno.]

The expugnation of Vienna he could never accomplish.
Sandys.

To EXPULSE. v. a. [expulsus, Latin.]

To drive out; to expel; to force away.

For ever should they be expuls'd from France, And not have title of an earldom there.
Shaks.

Suppose a nation where the custom were, that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of possessions, and put them to their pensions.
Bacon's Holy War.

Inwardly received, it may be very diuretick, and expulse the stone in the kidneys.
Brown.

Dictys relates, that Pelus was expulsed from his kingdom by Acastus.
Broome.

EXPULSION. n. f. [from expulse.]

1. The act of expelling or driving out.

A wooer,
More hateful than the foul expulsion is,
Of thy dear husband.
Shaks. Cymbeline.

Sole victor from th' expulsion of his foes,
Messiah his triumphal chariot turn'd.
Milton.

Others think it possible so to contrive several pieces of steel and a load-stone, that, by their continual attraction and expulsion of one another, they may cause a perpetual revolution of a wheel.
Wilkins' Dædalus.

This magnificent temple was not finished 'till after the expulsion of Tarquin.
Stillingfleet.

Coffee-coloured urine proceeds from a mixture of a small quantity of blood with the urine; but often prognosticates a resolution of the obstructing matter, and the expulsion of gravel or a stone.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The state of being driven out.

To what end had the angel been sent to keep the entrance into Paradise after Adam's expulsion, if the universe had been Paradise.
Raleigh.

EXPULSIVE. adj. [from expulse.] Having the power of expulsion.

If the member be dependent, by raising of it up, and placing it equal with, or higher than the rest of the body, the influx may be restrained, and the part strengthened by expulsive bandages.
Wifeman's Surgery.

EXPUNCTION. n. f. [from expunge.] Abolition; the act of expunging, blotting, or effacing.

To EXPUNGE. v. a. [expungo, Latin.]

1. To blot out; to rub out.

The difference of the denarius and drachm having been done in the manuscript, it was needless to expunge it.
Arbuthnot.

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions, and expungings made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick.
Swift.

2. To efface; to annihilate.

Wilt thou not to a broken heart dispense
The balm of mercy, and expunge th' offence?
Sandys.

Deduct what is but vanity, or dross,
Or learning's luxury, or idleness,
Or tricks to shew the stretch of human brain
Mere curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all, our vices have created arts:
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serve the past, and must the times to come!

EXPURGATION. n. f. [expurgatio, Latin.]

1. The act of purging or cleansing.

All the intestines, but especially the great ones, kidneys and ureters, serve for expurgation.
Wifeman's Surgery.

2. Purification from bad mixture, as of error or falsehood.

EXS

Wise men know, that arts and learning want expurgation; and if the course of truth be permitted to itself, it cannot escape many errors.
Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errors.

EXPURGATOR. n. f. One who corrects by expunging.

They may well be allowed an expurgator.
Lord Digby.

EXPURGATORY. adj. [expurgatorius, Latin.] Employed in purging away what is noxious: as, the expurgatory index of the Romanists directs the abolition or expunction of passages admitted by any authors contrary to popery.

There wants expurgatory animadversions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXQUISITE. adj. [exquisitus, Latin.]

1. Far-sought; excellent; consummate; complete.

His absolute exactness they imitate by tending unto that which is most exquisite in every particular.
Hooker.

Why should the state be troubled with this needless charge of keeping and maintaining so great a navy in such exquisite perfection and readiness.
Raleigh's Essays.

Adam and Eve, before the fall, were a different species; and none but a poet of the most unbounded invention, and the most exquisite judgment, could have fitted their conversation and behaviour to their state of innocence.
Addis.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them.
Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Consummately bad.

With exquisite malice they have mixed the gall and vinegar of falsity and contempt.
K. Charles.

3. Very sensibly felt.

The scales of the scarf-skin hinder objects from making too painful and exquisite impression on the nerves.
Cheyne.

EXQUISITELY. adv. [from exquisite.] Perfectly; completely: in either a good or ill sense.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite themselves, and become stronger.
Bacon.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick, and sought in the most remote parts by Epenius, the most excellent linguist.
Wotton.

The soldier then, in Grecian arts unskill'd,
Returning rich with plunder from the field,
If cups of silver or of gold be brought,
With jewels set, and exquisitely wrought,
To glorious trappings strait the plate he turn'd,
And with the glitt'ring spoil his horse adorn'd.
Dryden.

The poetry of operas is generally as exquisitely ill as the music is good.
Addison on Italy.

EXQUISITENESS. n. f. [from exquisite.] Nicety; perfection.

We suppose the superficies of the two glasses should be so exactly flat and smooth, that no air at all can come between them; and experience has informed us, that it is extremely difficult to procure from our ordinary tradesmen either glasses or marbles so much as approaching such an exquisiteness.
Boyle.

EXSCRIPT. n. f. [exscriptum, Latin.] A copy; a writing copied from another.

EXSICCANT. adj. [from exsiccare.] Drying; having the power to dry up.

Some are moderately moist, and require to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as fleshy parts; others dry in themselves, yet require exsicants, as bones.
Wifeman.

EXT

To EXSICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry.

If in a dissolution of steel a separation of parts be made by precipitation, or exhalation, the exsiccated powder ascends not unto the loadstone.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Great heats and droughts exsiccate and waste the moisture and vegetative nature of the earth.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

EXSICCATION. n. f. [from exsiccare.] The act of drying.

That which is concentered by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation; as earth, dirt, and clay.
Brown.

EXSICCATIVE. adj. [from exsiccare.] Having the power of drying.

EXSPUTION. n. f. [expuo, Latin.] A discharge of saliva by spitting.
Quincy.

EXSUCTION. n. f. [exugo, Latin.] The act of sucking out, or draining out, without immediate contact of the power of sucking with the thing sucked.

If you open the valve, and force up the sucker, after this first exsuction, you will drive out almost a whole cylinder full of air.
Boyle.

EXSUDATION. n. f. [from exudo, Latin.] A sweating out; an extillation; an emission.

They seemed to be made by an exsudation, or extillation of some petrifying juices out of the rocky earth.
Derham.

EXSUFFLATION. n. f. [ex and sufflo, Latin.] A blast working underneath.

Of volatility, the most degree is when it will fly away without returning: the next is when it will fly up, but with ease return: the next is when it will fly upwards over the helm, by a kind of exsufflation, without vapouring.
Bacon.

To EXSUFFOLATE. v. a. [a word peculiar to Shakspeare.] To whisper; to buzz in the ear: from the Italian verb suffolar.

Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsuffolate and blown surmises.
Othello.

To EXSUSCITATE. v. a. [exsuscito, Lat.] To rouse up; to stir up.
Diæ.

EXTANCY. n. f. [from extant.]

1. The state of rising above the rest.

2. Parts rising up above the rest; in opposition to those depressed.

The order of the little extancies, and consequently that of the little depressions, will be altered likewise.
Boyle on Colours.

EXTANT. adj. [extans, Latin.]

1. Standing out to view; standing above the rest.

That part of the teeth which is extant above the gums is naked, and not invested with that sensible membrane called perioseum, wherewith the other bones are covered.
Ray.

If a body have part of it extant, and part of it immersed in fluid, then so much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part shall be equal in gravity to the whole.
Bentley.

2. Publick; not suppressed.

The first of the continued weekly bills of mortality, extant at the parish clerks hall, begins the twenty-ninth of December 1603.
Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

EXTA'TICAL. } adj. [extaticus. See Ec-
EXTA'TACK. } STACY.]

1. Tending to something external.

I find in me a great deal of extatical love, which continually carries me to good without myself.
Boyle.

2. Rapturous; in a state in which the soul seems to leave the body.

In trance extatick may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

EXTE'MPORAL. adj. [extemporalis, Lat.]

1. Uttered without premeditation; quick; ready; sudden.

Alcidimus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excellenth premeditated speech. Hooker.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation, of good extemporal judgment and discourse, for the satisfying of publick ministers. Wotton.

2. Speaking without premeditation.

Many foolish things fall from wise men, if they speak in haste, or be extemporal.
Ben Jonson.

EXTE'MPORALLY. adv. [from extemporal.] Quickly; without premeditation.

The quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels. Shakspeare.

EXTE'MPORANEUS. adj. [extemporaneus, Latin.] Unpremeditated; sudden.

EXTE'MPORARY. adj. [extemporarius, Lat.] Uttered or performed without premeditation; sudden; quick.

This custom was begun by our ancestors out of an ambition of shewing their extemporary ability of speaking upon any subject. More.

That men should confer at very distant removes by an extemporary intercourse, is another reputed impossibility. Glanville.

They write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extemporary expletives. Swift.

EXTE'MPORE. adv. [extempore, Lat.]

1. Without premeditation; suddenly; readily; without any previous care or preparation.

You may do it extempore; for it is but roaring. Shakspeare.

Nothing great ought to be ventured upon without preparation; but, above all, how sot-tish is it to engage extempore, where the concern is eternity? South's Sermons.

Hast thou no mark at which to bend thy bow?
Or, like a boy, pursu't the carrion-crow
With pellets and with stones from tree to tree,
A fruitless toil, and liv'st extempore? Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective, but very improperly.

I have known a woman branch out into a long extempore dissertation upon a petticoat. Addison.

EXTE'MPORINESS. n. f. [from extempore.] The faculty of speaking or acting without premeditation; the state of being unpremeditated.

To EXTE'MPORIZE. v. n. [from extempore.] To speak extempore, or without premeditation.

The extemporizing faculty is never more out of its element than in the pulpit; though even here, it is much more excusable in a sermon than in a prayer. South's Sermons.

To EXTE'ND. v. a. [extendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out in any direction.

See the figure of his lifeless friend,
And his old fire, his helpless hand extend.
Dryden's Virgil.

Should'ring God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, and extends his hands. Pope.

2. To amplify: opposed to contract.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own manner of writing; but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office. Wotton.

3. To spread abroad; to diffuse; to expand.

He much magnifies the capacity of his understanding, who persuades himself that he can ex- tend his thoughts farther than God exists, or imagine any expansion where he is not. Locke.

4. To widen to a large comprehension.

Few extend their thoughts towards universal knowledge. Locke.

5. To stretch into assignable dimensions; to make local; to magnify so as to fill some assignable space.

The mind, say they, while you sustain

To hold her station in the brain?

You grant, at least she is extended,

Ergo the whole dispute is ended. Prior.

6. To enlarge; to continue.

To Helen's bed the gods alone assign

Hermione t' extend the regal line. Pope's Odys.

7. To increase in force or duration.

If much you note him,

You shall offend him, and extend his passion:

Feed and regard him not. Shakspeare's Macb.

The eyes of Tobit carrying in themselves some action of their own, were additionally promoted by that power which can extend their natures into production of effects, beyond created efficiencies.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

8. To enlarge the comprehension of any position.

Seeing it is not set down how far the bounds of his speech concerning dissimilitude reach, who can assure us that it extendeth farther than to those things only wherein the nations were idolatrous? Hooker.

9. To impart; to communicate.

Let there be none to extend mercy unto him.

Psalms.

10. To seize by course of law.

The law, that settles all you do,

And marries where you did but woo;

And if it judge upon your side,

Will soon extend her for your bride;

And put her person, goods or lands,

Or which you like best, int' your hands. Hudib.

To EXTE'ND. v. n. To reach to any distance.

My goodness extendeth not to thee. Psalms.

The bigness of such a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of a middling lungs can easily extend.
Graunt.

EXTE'NDER. n. f. [from extend.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extended.

The extension made, the extenders are to be loosened gently. Wiseman.

EXTE'NDIBLE. adj. [from extend.]

1. Capable of extension; capable to be made wider or longer.

Tubes, recently made of fluids, are easily lengthened; such as have often suffered force, grow rigid, and hardly extendible. Arbuthnot.

2. That may be seized by law.

EXTE'NDLESSNESS. n. f. [from extend.] Unlimited extension. In this sense it is once found; but, I think, with little propriety.

Certain molecular seminales must keep the world from an infinitude and extendlessness of excursions every moment into new figures and animals.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EXTENSIBILITY. n. f. [from extensible.]
The quality of being extensible.

In what manner they are mixed, so as to give a fibre extensibility; who can say? Grew.

EXTENSIBLE. adj. [extensio, Latin.]

1. Capable of being stretched into length or breadth.

The malleous being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inward. Holder.

2. Capable of being extended to a larger comprehension.

That love is blind, is extensible beyond the object of poetry. Glanville.

EXTENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from extensi-ble.] Capacity of being extended.

EXTENSION. n. f. [from extensio, Lat.]

1. The act of extending.

2. The state of being extended.

The hiccough cometh of fulness of meat, especially in children, which causeth an extension of the stomach. Bacon.

All rest satisfied at the postures of moderation, and none endure the extremity of flexure or extension. Brown.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters, or extension of it above the waters, doth agree to the antediluvian earth. Burnet.

By this idea of solidity is the extension of body distinguished from the extension of space: the extension of body being nothing but the cohesion or continuity of solid, separable, moveable parts;
and the extension of space, the continuity of un-solid, inseparable, and immoveable parts. Locke.

EXTENSIONAL. adj. [from extension.]

Long drawn out; having great extent.

You run into these extensional phantasms, which I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wriggings up and down of pismires.
More's Divine Dialogues.

EXTENSIVE. adj. [extensivus, Latin.]

1. Wide; large.

I would not be understood to recommend to all a pursuit of those sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced them. Watts on the Mind.

2. That may be extended. Not used.

Silver beaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer.
Boyle.

EXTENSIVELY. adv. [from extensive.]

Widely; largely.

'Tis impossible for any to pass a right judgement concerning them, without entering into most of these circumstances, and surveying them extensively, and comparing and balancing them all aright. Watts on the Mind.

EXTENSIVENESS. n. f. [from extensive.]

1. Largeness; diffusiveness; wideness.

As we have reason to admire the excellency of this contrivance, so have we to applaud the extensiveness of the benefit. Gov. of Tongue.

An extensiveness of understanding and a large memory are of service. Watts' Logic.

2. Possibility to be extended.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatibility or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents: I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.

EXTENSOR. n. f. [Latin.] The muscle by which any limb is extended.

Extensors are muscles so called, which serve to extend any part. Quincy.

Civil people had the flexors of the head very strong; but in the insolent there was a great overbalance of strength in the extensors of the neck. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

EXTENT. participle from extend. Extended. Not used.

Both his hands most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly.
Spenser.

EXTENT. n. f. [extentus, Latin.]

1. Space or degree to which any thing is extended.

If I mean to reign
David's true heir, and his full sceptre sway
To just extent over all Israel's sons. Milton.

2. Bulk; size; compass.

The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
Of huge extent sometimes. Milton.

- Ariana, of Darius' race,
That rul'd th' extent of Asia. Glover.
3. Communication; distribution.
An emperor of Rome,
Troubled, confronted thus, and for th' extent,
Of equal justice us'd with such contempt. Shaksp.
4. Execution; seizure.
Let my officers
Make an extent upon his house and land,
And turn him going. Shaksp. As you Like it.
- To EXTENUATE. v. a. [extenuo, Latin.]
1. To lessen; to make small or slender in bulk.
His body behind his head becomes broad, from whence it is again extenuated all the way to the tail. Grew's Museum.
2. To lessen; to diminish in any quality.
To persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Shaksp.
But fortune there extenuates the crime;
What's vice in me, is only mirth in him. Dryd.
3. To lessen; to degrade; to diminish in honour.
Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
Who can extenuate thee? Milton's Parad. Lost.
4. To lessen in representation; to palliate: opposite to aggravate.
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me, as I am: nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice. Shaksp.
Upon his examination he denied little of that wherewith he was charged, nor endeavoured much to excuse or extenuate his fault; so that, not very wisely thinking to make his offence less by confession, he made it enough for condemnation. Bacon.
Yet hear me, Sampson, not that I endeavour
To lessen or extenuate my offence. Milton.
5. To make lean.
6. To make rare: opposed to dense.
The race of all things here is to extenuate and turn things to be more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.
- EXTENUATION. n. f. [from extenuate.]
1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.
2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.
When sin is to be judged, the kindest enquiry is what deeds of charity we can alledge in extenuation
of our punishment. Atterbury.
3. A loss of plumpness, or a general decay of the muscular flesh of the whole body. Quincy.
A third sort of marasmus is an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat and dryness of the parts. Harvey.
- EXTERIOR. adj. [exterior, Latin.]
Outward; external; not intrinsic.
And what is faith, love, virtue unessay'd Alone, without exterior help sustain'd. Milton.
Seraphick and common lovers behold exterior beauties, as children and astronomers consider Galileo's optick glasses. Boyle.
Father, blacker, and merrier, are words which, together with the thing they denominate, imply also something else separate and exterior to the existence of that thing. Locke.
- EXTERIORLY. adv. [from exterior.] Outwardly; externally; not intrinsically.
You have slander'd nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind,
Than to be butcher of an innocent child. Shaksp.
- To EXTERMINATE. v. a. [extermino, Latin.] To root out; to tear up; to drive away; to abolish; to destroy.

- Unlucky vices, on which the exterminating lot happened to fall. Decay of Piety.
Alexander left Grecian colonies in the Indies;
but they were exterminated by Sandrocothus. Arbutnot on Coins.
This discovery alone is sufficient, if the vices of men did not captivate their reason, to explode and exterminate rank atheism out of the world. Bentley's Sermons.
- EXTERMINATION. n. f. [from exterminate.] Destruction; excision.
The question is, how far an holy war is to be pursued, whether to displanting and extermination of people? Bacon.
- EXTERMINATOR. n. f. [exterminator, Latin.]
The person or instrument by which any thing is destroyed.
- To EXTERMINE. v. a. [extermino, Latin.]
To exterminate; to destroy. Not used.
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. As you Like it.
- EXTERN. adj. [externus, Latin.]
1. External; outward; visible.
When my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at. Shakspere's Othello.
2. Without itself; not inherent; not intrinsic; not depending on itself.
When two bodies are pressed one against another, the rare body not being so able to resist division as the dense, and being not permitted to retire back, by reason of the extern violence impelling it, the parts of the rare body must be severed. Digby.
- EXTERNAL. adj. [externus, Latin.]
1. Outward; not proceeding from itself; operating or acting from without: opposite to internal.
We come to be assured that there is such a being, either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause, and which we cannot attribute to any other but such as we conceive God to be. Tillotson.
Shells being exposed loose upon the surface of the earth to the injuries of weather, to be trod upon by horses and other cattle, and to many other external accidents, are, in tract of time, broken to pieces. Woodward.
2. Having the outward appearance; having to the view or outward perception any particular nature.
Adam was then no less glorious in his externals:
he had a beautiful body as well as an immortal soul. South.
He that commits only the external act of idolatry is as guilty as he that commits the external act of theft. Stillingfleet.
- EXTERNALLY. adv. [from external.] Outwardly.
The exterior ministry, externally and alone, hath in it nothing excellent, as being destitute of the sanctity that God requires, and it is common to wicked men and good. Taylor.
- To EXTERIL. v. n. [ex and stillo, Latin.] To drop or distil from.
- EXTILLATION. n. f. [from ex and stillo, Latin.] The act of falling in drops.
They seemed made by an exudation or extillation of putrifying juices out of the rocky earth. Derham's Phys. Theology.
- To EXTIMULATE. v. a. [extimulo, Latin.] To prick; to incite by stimulation.
Choler is one excretion whereby nature excludeth another, which, descending into the

- bowels, extimulates and excites them unto expulsion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- EXTIMULATION. n. f. [from extimulatio, Latin.] Pungency; power of exciting motion or sensation.
The native spirits admit great diversity; as,
hot, cold, active, dull, &c. whence proceed most of the virtues of bodies; but the air intermixed is without virtues, and maketh things in-spid, and without any extimulation. Bacon.
- EXTINCT. adj. [extinctus, Latin.]
1. Extinguished; quenched; put out.
They are extinct, quenched as tow. Isaiah.
Their purple vengeance bath'd in gore retires,
Her weapons blunted, and extinct her fires. Pope.
2. At a stop; without progressive succession.
My days are extinct. Job.
The royal family is all extinct,
And she who reigns bestows her crown on me. Dryden.
The nobility are never likely to be extinct, because the greatest part of their titles descend to heirs general. Swift.
3. Abolished; out of force.
A censure inflicted a jure continues, though such law be extinct, or the lawgiver removed from his office. Ayliffe.
- EXTINCTION. n. f. [extinctio, Latin.]
1. The act of quenching or extinguishing.
Red-hot needles or wires, extinguished in quicksilver, do yet acquire a verticity according to the laws of position and extinction. Brown.
2. The state of being quenched.
The parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat, and dissipation of their radical moisture. Harvey.
3. Destruction; excision.
The extinction of nations, and the desolation of kingdoms, were but the effects of this destructive evil. Rogers' Sermons.
4. Suppression.
They lie in dead oblivion, losing half
The fleeting moments of too short a life,
Total extinction of th' enlighten'd soul. Thomson.
- To EXTINGUISH. v. a. [extinguo, Latin.]
1. To put out; to quench.
The soft god of pleasure that warm'd our desires,
Has broken his bow, and extinguish'd his fires. Dryden.
Then rose the seed of chaos and of night,
To blot out order, and extinguish light. Pope.
2. To suppress; to destroy.
They extinguish the love of the people to the young king, by remembering some imperfec-tions of his father. Hayward.
My fame of chastity, by which the skies
I reacht before, by thee extinguish'd dies. Denham.
3. To cloud; to obscure.
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,
Her nat'ral graces that extinguish art. Shakspere.
- EXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [from extinguisb.] That may be quenched, suppressed, or destroyed.
- EXTINGUISHER. n. f. [from extinguisb.] A hollow cone put upon a candle to quench it.
If it should ever offer to flame out again, I would use the conicum as an extinguisher to smother it. More's Divine Dialogues.
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames. Dryden.
'Tis better to cover the vital flame with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket. Collier on the Value of Life.
- EXTINGUISHMENT. n. f. [from extinguisb.]

EXT

1. Extinction; suppression; act of quenching; destruction.

When death's form appears, she seareth not
An utter quenching, or extinguishment;
She would be glad to meet with such a lot,
That so she might all future ill prevent.

Davies

He moved him to a war upon Flanders, for the better extinguishment of the civil wars of France.

Bacon

The immediate cause of death is the resolution or extinguishment of the spirits.

Bacon

2. Abolition; nullification.

Divine laws of christian church polity may not be altered by extinguishment.

Hooker

3. Termination of a family or succession.

His heart easily conceived treason against the crown, wherein he perished himself, and made a final extinguishment of his house and honour.

Davies on Ireland

To EXTIRP. v. a. [extirpo, Latin.] To eradicate; to root out. Not used.

Which to extirp he laid him privily
Down in a darksome lowly place far in. Fairy Q.
Nor shall that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirped from our provinces.

Shaksp.

To EXTIRPATE. v. a. [extirpo, Lat.]
To root out; to eradicate; to excise;
to destroy.

The rebels were grown so strong, that they made account speedily to extirpate the British nation in that kingdom.

Dryden

We in vain endeavour to drive the wolf from our own to another's door; the breed ought to be extirpated out of the island.

Locke

It is not the business of virtue to extirpate the affections, but to regulate them.

Addison

EXTIRPATION. n. s. [from extirpate.]
The act of rooting out; eradication;
excision; destruction.

It is said that popery, for want of utter extirpation, hath in some places taken root and flourished again.

Hooker

Religion requires the extirpation of all those passions and vices which render men unsociable and troublesome to one another.

Tillotson

EXTIRPATOR. n. s. [from extirpate.]
One who roots out; a destroyer.

EXTISPICIOUS. adj. [extispicium, Lat.] Augural; relating to the inspection of entrails in order to prognostication.

Thus hath he deluded many nations unto his augural and extispicious inventions, from casual and uncontrived contingencies, divining events succeeding.

Brown's Vulgar Errors

To EXTOL. v. a. [extollo, Latin.] To praise; to magnify; to laud; to celebrate.

Extol him that rideth upon the heavens.

Psalms

When a rich man speaketh, every man holdeth his tongue; and look, what he saith they extol it to the clouds.

Ecclesiasticus

Heaven and earth shall high extol
Thy praises with th' innumerable sound Of hymns, and sacred songs, wherewith thy throne

Encompass'd shall resound thee ever blest'd.

Milton

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet amomum boast.

Dryd.

EXTOLLER. n. s. [from extol.] A praiser; a magnifier; one that praises to the skies.

EXTORSIVE. adj. [from extort.] Having the quality of drawing by violent means.

EXTORSIVELY. adv. [from extorsive.] In an extorsive manner; by violence.

EXT

To EXTORT. v. a. [extorqueo, extortus, Latin.]

1. To draw by force; to force away; to wrest; to wring from one.

'Till the injurious Romans did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shakspere.
That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me, to bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his pow'r.

Milton's Paradise Lost

I remember well the impious oath,
Hardly extorted from my trembling youth.

Rowe

My earnest desires, not any doubts of your goodness, but my real concern for your well-fare, extort this from me.

Wake

2. To gain by violence or oppression.

His tail was stretch'd out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it taught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought.

Spenser

Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?

Shakspere's Henry VI.

To EXTORT. v. n. To practise oppression and violence. Disused.

To whom they never gave any penny of entertainment,
but let them feed upon the countries,
and extort upon all men where they come.

Spenser on Ireland

Before they did extort and oppress the people only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same extortions by warrant.

Davies on Ireland

EXTORTER. n. s. [from extort.] One who practises oppression or extortion.

Edric the extorter was deprived by king Canute of the government of Mercia.

Camden

EXTORTION. n. s. [from extort.]

1. The act or practice of gaining by violence and rapacity.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion.

Shakspere's Henry VIII.

Oppression and extortion did maintain the greatness, and oppression and extortion did extinguish the greatness of that house.

Davies

2. Force by which any thing is unjustly taken away.

Because the lords had power to impose this charge, the freeholders were glad to give a great part of their lands to hold the rest free from that extortion.

Davies on Ireland

A succeeding king's just recovery of rights from unjust usurpations and extortions, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine.

King Charles

EXTORTIONER. n. s. [from extortion.]

One who practises extortion; one who grows rich by violence and rapacity.

There will be always murderers, adulterers, extortioners, church-robbers, traitors, and other rabblement.

Camden

The covetous extortioner is involved in the same sentence.

Decay of Piety

To EXTRA'CT. v. a. [extraho, extractus, Latin.]

1. To draw out of something.

The drawing one metal or mineral out of another,
we call extracting.

Bacon

Out of the ashes of all plants they extract a salt which they use in medicines.

Bacon

The metallick or mineral matter is so diffused amongst the crasser matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it.

Woodward

2. To draw by chymical operation.

Whom sunny Borneo bears, are stor'd with streams
Egregious, rum and rice's spirit extract.

Philips

3. To take from something of which the thing taken was a part.

EXT

I now see

Bone of my bone, flesh of my flesh, myself
Before me: woman is her name, of man
Extracted.

Milton

4. To draw out of any containing body or cavity.

These waters were extracted, and laid upon the surface of the ground.

Burnet

5. To select an abstract from a larger treatise.

To see how this case is represented, I have extracted out of that pamphlet a few notorious fallhoods.

Swift

EXTRACT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The substance extracted; the chief parts drawn from any thing.

In tinctures, if the superfluous spirit of wine be distilled off, it leaves at the bottom that thicker substance, which chemists call the extract of the vegetables.

Boyle

To dip our tongues in gall, to have nothing in our mouth but the extract and exhalation of our inward bitterness, is no great sensuality.

Government of the Tongue

2. The chief heads drawn from a book; an abstract; an epitome.

I will present a few extracts out of authors.

Camden's Remains

Some books may be read by extracts made of them by others, but only in the less important arguments, and the meaner books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things.

Bacon's Essays

Spend some hours every day in reading, and making extracts, if your memory be weak.

Swift

3. Extraction; descent. Not used.

The apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract, branding it with the most ignominious imputation of foolishness.

South

EXTRACTION. n. s. [extractio, Latin.]

1. The act of drawing one part out of a compound; the act of drawing out the principal substance by chymical operation.

Although the charge of extraction should exceed the worth, at least it will discover nature and possibility.

Bacon

The distillations of waters, extractions of oils, and such like experiments, are unknown to the ancients.

Hakerwill

It would not defray the charge and labour of the extraction, and must needs be all irremediably lost.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Derivation from an original; lineage; descent.

One whose extraction's from an ancient line,
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine;
The meanest in your nature mild and good,
The noble rest secured in your blood.

Waller

A family of an ancient extraction, transported with the Conqueror out of Normandy.

Claren

EXTRACTOR. n. s. [Latin.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extracted.

EXTRACTIONARY. adj. [extra and dictio, Latin.] Not consisting in words but realities.

Of extradictionary and real fallacies, Aristotle and logicians make fix; but we observe men are commonly deceived by four thereof.

Brown

EXTRAJUDICIAL. adj. [extra and judicium, Latin.] Out of the regular course of legal procedure.

A declaratory or extrajudicial absolution is conferred in foro penitentiali.

Ayliffe's Parergon

EXTRAJUDICIALLY. adv. [from extrajudicial.]
In a manner different from the ordinary course of legal procedure.

The confirmation of an election, though done by a previous citation of all persons concerned, may be said to be done extrajudicially, when opposition ensues thereupon.

Ayliffe

EXTRAMISSIION. n. f. [extra and mitto, Latin.] The act of emitting outward: opposite to intromission.

Aristotle, Alhazen, and others, hold that sight is by reception, and not by extramission; by receiving the rays of the object unto the eye, and not by sending any out. Brown.

EXTRAMUNDANE. adj. [extra and mundus, Latin.] Beyond the verge of the material world.

'Tis a philosophy that gives the exactest topography of the extramundane spaces. Glanville.

EXTRA'NEOUS. adj. [extraneus, Latin.] Not belonging to any thing; foreign; of different substance; not intrinsic.

Relation is not contained in the real existence of things, but something extraneous and superinduced. Locke.

When the mind refers any of its ideas to any thing extraneous to them, they are then called true or false. Locke.

Gold, when equally pure, and freed from extraneous matter, is absolutely alike in colour, consistence, specific gravity, and all other respects. Woodward on Fossils.

EXTRAORDINARILY. adv. [from extraordinary.]

1. In a manner out of the common method and order.

In the affairs which were not determinable one way or other by the scripture, himself gave an extraordinarily direction and counsel, as oft as they sought it at his hands. Hooker.

In government it is good to use men of one rank equally; for to countenance some extraordinarily, is to make them insolent, and the rest discontent. Bacon.

2. Uncommonly; particularly; eminently; remarkably.

He quotes me right; and I hope all his quotations, wherein he is so extraordinarily copious and elaborate, are so. Howel.

The temple of Solomon was a type, and therefore was so extraordinarily magnificent; otherwise perhaps a cheaper structure might have been as serviceable. Wilkins' Math. Magick.

EXTRAORDINARINESS. n. f. [from extraordinary.] Uncommonness; eminence; remarkableness.

I chuse some few either for the extraordinariness of their guilt, or the frequency of their practice. Gow. of the Tongue.

EXTRAORDINARY. adj. [extraordinarius, Latin.] This word and its derivatives are generally pronounced extrordinary, whereby the a is liquified into the o.]

1. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hooker.

Spain had no wars save those which were grown into an ordinary: now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Valtaline and the Palatinate. Bacon.

See what extraordinary armies have been transmitted thither, and what ordinary forces maintained there. Davies.

2. Different from the common course of law.

If they proceeded in a martial or any other extraordinary way, without any form of law, his majesty should declare his justice and affection to an old faithful servant. Clarendon.

3. Eminent; remarkable; more than common.

The house was built of fair and strong stone, not affecting so much any extraordinary kind of fineness, as an honourable representing of a firm stateliness. Sidney.

The Indians worshipped rivers, fountains, rocks, or great stones, and all things which seemed to have something extraordinary in them. Stillingfleet.

EXTRAORDINARY. adv. [This word seems only a colloquial barbarism, used for the ease of pronunciation.] Extraordinarily.

I ran over their cabinet of medals, but don't remember to have met with any things in it that are extraordinary rare. Addison.

EXTRAPARO'CHIAL. adj. [extra and parochia, Latin.] Not comprehended within any parish.

EXTRAPROVINCIAL. adj. [extra and provincia, Latin.] Not within the same province; not within the jurisdiction of the same archbishop.

An extraprovincial citation is not valid, ultra duas dietas, above two days journey; nor is a citation valid that contains many conditions manifestly inconvenient. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXTRARE'GULAR. adj. [extra and regula, Latin.] Not comprehended within a rule.

His providence is extraregular, and produces strange things beyond common rules; and he led Israel through a sea, and made a rock pour forth water. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

EXTRA'VAGANCE. } n. f. [extravagans,
EXTRA'VAGANCY. } Latin.]

1. Excursion or sally beyond prescribed limits.

I have troubled you too far with this extravagance: I shall make no delay to recall myself into the road again. Hammond.

2. Irregularity; wildness.

3. Outrage; violence; outrageous vehemence.

How many, by the wild fury and extravagancy of their own passions, have put their bodies into a combustion, and by stirring up their rage against others, have armed that fierce humour against themselves. Tillotson.

4. Unnatural tumour; bombast.

Some verses of my own, Maximin and Almanzor, cry vengeance upon me for their extravagance. Dryden.

5. Waste; vain and superfluous expence.

She was so expensive, that the income of three dukes was not enough to supply her extravagance. Arbuthnot.

EXTRA'VAGANT. adj. [extravagans, Latin.]

1. Wandering out of his bounds. This is the primogeneal sense, but not now in use.

At his warning
The extravagant and erring spirit hies
To his confine. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

2. Roving beyond just limits or prescribed methods.

I dare not ask for what you would not grant: But wishes, madam, are extravagant; They are not bounded with things possible; I may wish more than I presume to tell. Dryd.

3. Not comprehended in any thing.

Twenty constitutions of pope John XXII. are called the extravagants; for that they being written in no order or method, vagantu extra corpus collectionum canonum. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Irregular; wild.

For a dance they seem'd
Somewhat extravagant, and wild. Milton.

There appears something nobly wild and extravagant in great natural geniuses, infinitely more beautiful than turn and polishing. Addison.

New ideas employed my fancy all night, and composed a wild extravagant dream. Addison.

5. Wasteful; prodigal; vainly expensive.

An extravagant man, who has nothing else to recommend him but a false generosity, is often more beloved than a person of a much more finished character, who is defective in this particular. Addison.

EXTRA'VAGANT. n. f. One who is confined in no general rule or definition.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants. Glanville.

There are certain extravagants among people of all sizes and professions. L'Estrange.

EXTRA'VAGANTLY. adv. [from extravagant.]

1. In an extravagant manner; wildly.

Her passion was extravagantly new; But mine is much the madder of the two. Dryd.

2. In an unreasonable degree.

Some are found to praise our author, and others as rashly and extravagantly contradict his admirers. Pope.

3. Expensively; luxuriously; wastefully; profusely.

EXTRA'VAGANTNESS. n. f. [from extravagant.] Excess; excursion beyond limits.

To EXTRA'VAGATE. v. n. [extra and vagor, Latin.] To wander out of limits. Dist.

EXTRA'VASATED. adj. [extra and vasa, Latin.] Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuretick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Arbuthnot.

EXTRA'VASATION. n. f. [from extravasated.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced, out of the proper containing vessels.

Ailment, too viscous, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer. Arbuthnot.

EXTRA'VATE. adj. [extra and vena, Lat.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is affected in like manner as is the extravene blood by the sympathetick medicine, as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted. Glanville's Sceptis.

EXTRA'VERSION. n. f. [extra and versio, Latin.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles. Boyle.

EXTRA'UGHT. part. [This is an obsolete participle from extra; as distraught from distra.] Extracted.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart?

Shakspeare's Henry VI.

EXTREME. adj. [extremus, Lat.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification.]

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning. Deut.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Bacon.

2. Utmost.

- The hairy fool
 Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears. Shakspeare.
 Miseno's cape and Bauli last he view'd,
 That on the sea's extremest borders stood. Addis.
3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.
 Farewel, ungrateful and unkind! I go,
 Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:
 I go th' extremest remedy to prove,
 To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryd.
4. Pressing in the utmost degree.
 Cases of necessity being sometime but urgent, sometime extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker.

5. Rigorous; strict.

If thou be extreme to mark what is amiss, O
 Lord, who shall abide it? Psalms.

EXTREME. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.
 Thither by harpy footed furies hal'd,
 At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
 Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
 Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;
 From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
 Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round
 Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milton.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such
 Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be raised in an extreme, without opposition. Pope.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the ex- trêmes on either hand. Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree. Locke.

EXTREMELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

2. Very much; greatly: in familiar language.

Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices. Swift.

EXTREMITY. n. f. [extremitas, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Hooker.

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propiety gave any authority. Locke.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.

In its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing feathers, which are black. Brown.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. The points in the utmost degree of opposition, or at the utmost distance from each other.

He's a man of that strange composition
 Made up of all the worst extremities
 Of youth and age. Danham's Sophy.

4. Remotest parts; parts at the greatest distance.

They sent fleets out of the Red Sea to the extremities of Ethiopia, and imported quantities of precious goods. Arbuthnot.

5. Violence of passion.

With equal measure she did moderate
 The strong extremities of their outrage. Spenser.
 If I shew no colour for my extremity, let me be your tableport. Shakspeare.

6. The utmost violence, rigour, or distress.

Why should not the same laws take good effect on that people, being prepared by the sword, and brought under by extremity? Spenser.

Their hearts she guesseth,
 And yields her to extremity of time. Fairy Qu.
 He promised, if they should be besieged, to relieve them before they should be reduced to extremity. Clarendon.

It should be never so exposed to the extremity of war as to fall into those barbarous hands. Clarendon.

I wish peace, and any terms prefer,
 Before the last extremities of war. Dryden.

7. The most aggravated state.

The world is running mad after force, the extremity of bad poetry; or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatic writing. Dryden.

To EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Lat.]

To disembarra's; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Addison.

EXTRICATION. n. f. [from extricate.]

The act of disentangling; disentanglement.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by trans-mutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.]

External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrin- secal.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsic agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself.
Digby on Bodies.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsic impulse diverted from its natural course. Ray.

Outward objects, that are extrinsic to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

EXTRINSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsic.]

From without.
 If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glanv.

EXTRINSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.]

Outward; external.
 When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsic
 adherents. Gov. of the Tongue.

Extrinsic modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself;
 but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated. Watts's Logic.

To EXTRU'CT. v. a. [extruo, extruam, Latin.] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

EXTRU'CTOR. n. f. [from extruam.] A builder; a fabricator; a contriver.

To EXTRU'DE. v. a. [extrudo, Latin.]
 To thrust off; to drive off; to push out with violence.

If in any part of the continent they found the shells, they concluded that the sea had been extruded and driven off by the mud. Woodward.

EXTRU'SION. n. f. [extrusus, Latin.] The act of thrusting or driving out.

They suppose the channel of the sea formed, and mountains and caverns, by a violent deprefsion of some parts of the earth, and an extrusion and elevation of others. Burnet.

EXTU'BERANCE. n. f. [ex and tuber, Lat.]
 Knobs, or parts protuberant; parts that rise from the rest of the body.

The gouge takes off the irregularities or extu- berances that lie farthest from the axis of the work. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

EXU'BERANCE. n. f. [exuberatio, Latin.] Overgrowth; superfluous shoots; useless abundance; luxuriance.

Men esteem the overflowing of gall the exu- berance of zeal, and all the promises of the faithful combatant they confidently appropriate. Decay of Piety.

Though he expatiates on the same thoughts in different words, yet in his families that exuberance is avoided. Garth.

EXU'BERANT. adj. [exuberans, Latin.]

1. Growing with superfluous shoots; over-abundant; superfluously plenteous; luxuriant.

Another Flora there of bolder hues,
 Plays o'er the fields, and showers with sudden hand
Exuberant spring. Thomson's Spring.

His families have been thought too exuberant, and full of circumstances. Pope.

2. Abounding in the utmost degree.

Such immense power, such unsearchable wisdom, and such exuberant goodness, as may justly ravish us to an amazement, rather than a bare admiration. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

A part of that exuberant devotion, with which the whole assembly raised and animated one another, catches a reader at the greatest distance of time. Addison's Freeholder.

EXU'BERANTLY. adv. [from exuberant.]
 Abundantly; to a superfluous degree.

A considerable quantity of the vegetable matter lay at the surface of the antediluvian earth, and rendered it exuberantly fruitful. Woodward.

To EXU'BERATE. v. n. [exubero, Latin.]
 To abound in the highest degree.

All the loveliness imparted to the creature is lent it, to give us enlarged conceptions of that vast confluence and immensity that exuberates in God. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

EXU'CCOUS. adj. [exsuccus, Latin.] Without juice; dry.

This is to be effected not only in the plant yet growing, but in that which is brought exuccous and dry unto us. Brown.

EXUDA'TION. n. f. [from exudo, Latin.]

1. The act of emitting in sweat; the act of emitting moisture through the pores.

The tumour sometimes arises by a general ex-
udation out of the cutis. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. The matter issuing out by sweat from any body.

The gum of trees, shining and clear, is but a straining of the juice of the tree through the wood and bark; and Cornish diamonds, and rock ru-bies, which are yet more resplendent than gums, are the fine exudations of stone. Bacon.

If it hath more dew at noon than in the morning, then it seemeth to be an exudation of the herb itself. Bacon.

Cuckowspittle, or woodfere, that spumous frothy dew, or exudation, or both, is found especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To EXU'DATE. } v. n. [exudo, Lat.] To
To EXU'DE. } sweat out; to issue out by sweat.

Some perforations in the part itself, through which the humour included doth exudate, may be observed in such as are fresh. Brown.

The juices of the flowers are, first, the expressed juice; secondly, a volatile oil, wherein the smell of the plant perfides; thirdly, honey, exuding from all flowers, the bitter not excepted. Arbutnot.

To EXU'DATE. } v. a. To force out, or
To EXU'DE. } throw out, as by sweat.
To EXULCERATE. v. a. [exulcero,
Latin.]

1. To make sore with an ulcer; to affect with a running or eating sore.

Cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it, if they stay on long. Bacon.

That the saliva hath a virtue of macerating bodies, appears by the effects in taking away warts, sometimes, exulcerating the jaws, and rotting the teeth. Ray on the Creation.

The stagnating serum turning acrimonious, exulcerates and putrifies the bowels. Arbutnot.

2. To afflict; to corrode; to enrage.

Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,

Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exulperate, exulcerate, and raise Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb
Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton.

EXULCERATION. n. f. [from exulcerate.]

1. The beginning erosion, which wears away the substance and forms an ulcer. Quincy.

2. Exacerbation; corrosion.

This exulceration of mind made him apt to take all occasions of contradiction. Hooker.

EXULCERATORY. adj. [from exulcerate.]

Having a tendency to cause ulcers.

To EXULT. v. n. [exulto, Latin.] To rejoice above measure; to triumph; to be in high exaltation of gladness.

The whole world did seem to exult that it had occasion of pouring out gifts to so blessed a purpose. Hooker.

Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and rail, at once
Over the wretched? Shakspeare's As you like it

EXULTANCE. n. f. [from exult.] Trans- port; joy; triumph; gladness; exul- tation.

We have great cause of exultance and joy, God's service being the most perfect freedom. Government of the Tongue.

EXULTATION. n. f. [exultatio, Latin.]
Joy; triumph; rapturous delight.

Good effects may grow in each of the people towards other, in them all towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them; between whom there daily and interchangeably pass, in the hearing of God himself, and in the presence of his holy angels, so many heavenly acclamations, exultations, provocations, petitions. Hooker.

Devotion inspires men with sentiments of religious gratitude, and swells their hearts with inward transports of joy and exultation. Addison.

To EXUNDATE. v. n. [exundo Lat.]
To overflow. Diſt.

EXUNDATION. n. f. [from exundate.]
Overflow; abundance.

It is more worthy the Deity to attribute the creation of the world to the exundation and overflowing of his transcendent and infinite goodness. Ray on the Creation.

EXUPERABLE. adj. [exuperabilis, Latin.]
Conquerable; superable; vincible.

EXUPERANCE. n. f. [exuperantia, Lat.]
Overbalance; greater proportion.

Rome hath less variation than London; for on the west side of Rome are seated France, Spain, and Germany, which take off the exuperance, and balance the vigour of the eastern parts. Brown.

To EXUSCITATE. v. a. [exuscito, Lat.]
To stir up; to rouse.

EXUSTION. n. f. [exustio, Latin.] The act of burning up; consumption by fire.

EXUVIÆ. n. f. [Latin.] Cast skins; cast shells; whatever is thrown off, or shed by animals.

They appear to be only the skins or exuviae, rather than entire bodies of fishes. Woodward.

EX, EA, EE, may either come from ix, an island, by melting the Saxon g into y, which is usually done; or from the Saxon ea, which signifies a water, river, &c. or, lastly, from ieag, a field, by the same kind of melting. Gibson.

EX'AS. n. f. [niais, French.] A young hawk juft taken from the nest, not able to prey for itself. Hanmer.

An airy of children, little eyases, that cry out. Shakspeare.

EX'ASMUSKET. n. f. A young unfledged
male hawk of the musket kind. Hanmer.

Here comes little Robin.—How now, my eyas- musket; what news with you? Shakspeare.

EYE. n. f. obsolete plural eyne, now eyes.
[auga, Gothick; eaz, Saxon; oog,
Dutch; ee, Scottish, plur. eene.]

1. The organ of vision; the medium of the sense of sight.

Good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof off the easier. Shak.

Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars to shine,

Those clouds remov'd, upon our watry eyne.
Shakspeare.

Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eyes opposed,
Salute each other with each other's form. Shak.

He kept him as the apple of his eye. Deut.

As long looking against the sun or fire hurteth the eye by dilatation; so curious printing in small volumes, and reading of small letters, do hurt the eye by contraction. Bacon.

His awful presence did the crowd surprize,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confest'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

But sure the eye of time beholds no name
So blest as thine in all the rolls of fame. Pope.

2. Sight; ocular knowledge.

Who hath bewitched you, that you should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth? Gal.

3. Look; countenance.

I'll say you grey is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shak.

4. Front; face.

To justify this worthy nobleman,
Her shall you hear disproved to your eyes. Shak.

5. A posture of direct opposition, where one thing is in the same line with another.

Now pass'd, on either side they nimbly tack,
Both strive to intercept and guide the wind;
And in its eye more closely they come back,
To finish all the deaths they left behind. Dryden.

6. Aspect; regard.

Having an eye to a number of rites and orders in the church of England, as marrying with the ring; sundry church-offices, dignities, and callings, for which they found no commandment in the holy scripture, they thought by the one only stroke of an axiom to have cut them off. Hooker.

As in scripture a number of laws, particular and positive, being in force, may not by any law of man be violated; we are, in making laws, to have thereunto an especial eye. Hooker.

The man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eyes shall not be evil towards his brother. Deut.

He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed. Proverbs.

None should be put into either of those commissions, with an eye of favour to their persons, to give them countenance or reputation in the places where they live. Bacon to Villiers.

These are intrinsic difficulties arising from the text itself, as the uncertainty sometimes who are the persons he speaks to, or the opinions or practices which he has in his eye. Locke.

Winds and hurricanes at land, tempests and storms at sea, have always been looked upon with as evil an eye as earthquakes. Woodward.

Several performances have been justly applauded for their wit, which have been written with an eye to this predominant humour of the town. Addison.

We were the most obedient creatures in the world, constant to our duty, and kept a steady eye on the end for which we were sent hither. Speſt.

In this disposal of my sister, I have had an eye to her being a wit, and provided that the bridegroom be a man of sound judgment. Tatler.

Booksellers mention with respect the authors they have printed, and consequently have an eye to their own advantage. Addison.

7. Notice; observation; vigilance; watch.

Lawmakers must have an eye to the place where, and to the men amongst whom. Hooker.

His majesty hath cast his eyes upon you, as finding you to be such as you should be, or hoping to make you to be such as he would have you to be. Bacon.

If the English had driven the Irish into the open countries, where they might have an eye and observation upon them, the Irish had been easily kept in order. Davies on Ireland.

Spenser has followed both Virgil and Theocritus in the charms which he employs for curing Britomartis of her love; but he had also our poet's Ceiris in his eye. Dryden's Æneid.

Misdoubt my constancy; and do not try;
But stay and ever keep me in your eye. Dryden.

After this jealousy he kept a strict eye upon him. L'Eſtrange.

This method of teaching children by a repeated practice, under the eye and direction of the tutor, 'till they have got the habit of doing well, has many advantages. Locke.

8. Opinion formed by observation.

She told her husband, she designed to be beautiful in no body's eye but his. Sidney.

It hath, in their eye, no great affinity with the form of the church of Rome. Hooker.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes.
Shakspeare.

I was as far from meditating a war, as I was, in the eye of the world, from having any preparations for one. King Charles.

Though he in all the people's eyes seem'd great,
Yet greater he appear'd in his retreat. Denham.

9. Sight; view; the place in which any thing may be seen.

There shall he practise tilts and tournaments,
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen;
And be, in eye of every exercise,
Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth. Shak.

10. Any thing formed like an eye.

We see colours like the eye of a peacock's feather, by pressing our eyes on either corner, whilst we look the other way. Newton.

11. Any small perforation.

This Ajax has not so much wit as will stop the eye of Helen's needle. Shakspeare.

Does not our Saviour himself speak of the intolerable difficulty which they cause in men's passage to heaven? Do not they make the narrow way much narrower, and contract the gate which leads to life to the straightness of a needle's eye? South's Sermons.

12. A small catch into which a hook goes.

Those parts if they cohere to one another but by rest only, may be much more easily dissociated and put into motion by any external body, than they could be, if they were by little hooks and eyes, or other kind of fastenings, entangled in one another. Boyle.

13. Bud of a plant.

Prune and cut off all your vine-shoots to the very root, save one or two of the stoutest, to be left with three or four eyes of young wood. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Since my becomings kill me when they do not Eye well to you. Shakspeare.

EYEBALL. n. f. [eye and ball.] The apple of the eye; the pupil.

Be subject to no sight but mine: invisible
To every eyeball else. Shakspeare.

I feel my hair grow stiff, my eyeballs rowl;
This is the only form could shake my soul. Dry.

Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride
Turns you from sound philosophy aside,
Not when from plate to plate your eyeballs roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope.

EYEBRIGHT. n. f. [euphrasia, Latin.] A plant, called by Milton euphrasy.

EYEBROW. n. f. [eye and brow.] The hairy arch over the eye.

The lover,
Sighing like a furnace; with a woful ballad
Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Shakspeare.

On the seventh day he shall shave all his hair off his head, his beard, and his eyebrows. Lev.

Above stand the eyebrows, to keep any thing from running down upon the eyes; as drops of sweat from the forehead, or dust. Ray.

The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red;
He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair. Dryden.

EYED. adj. [from eye.] Having eyes: used in composition.

Some reliques of the true antiquity,
Though disfigured, a well-eyed man
May happily discover. Spenser.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

EY'EDROP. n. f. [eye and drop.] Tear.

That tyranny which never quaff but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife
With gentle eyedrops. Shakspeare.

EY'EGANCE. n. f. [eye and glance.] Quick notice of the eye.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not For Guyon's looks; but scornful eyegance at him shot. Fairy Queen.

EY'EGLOSS. n. f. [eye and glass.] Spectacles; glass to assist the sight.

Ha' you not seen Camillo?
But that's past doubt you have; or your eyeglass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn. Shakspeare.

By comparing it with a good perspective of four foot in length, made with a concave eyeglass, I could read at a greater distance with my own instrument than with the glass. Newton.

EY'ELASH. n. f. [eye and lash.] The line of hair that edges the eyelid.

EY'ELESS. adj. [from eye.] Wanting eyes; sightless; deprived of sight.

A proclaim'd prize! most happy!
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakspeare.

Promise was, that I Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver:
Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him
Eyeless in Gaza, at the mill with slaves. Milton.

Pentheus durst deride
The cheated people, and the eyeless guide. Addis.

Meonides,
Poor eyeless pilgrim. Philips.

Cyclop, if any pitying thy disgrace,

Slitting the back and fingers of a glove, I made eyelet holes to draw it close. Wise man.

EY'ELID. n. f. [eye and lid.] The membrane that shuts over the eye.

Mark when she smiles with amiable cheer,
And tell me whereto can ye liken it!
When on each eyelid sweetly do appear
An hundred graces as in shade to sit. Spenser.

On my eyelids is the shadow of death. Job.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee
once;
The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly doat
Upon the next live creature that it sees. Shakspeare.

The Turks have a black powder, made of a mineral called alcohol, which with a fine long pencil they lay under their eyelids, which doth colour black, whereby the white of the eye is set off more white. Bacon.

At length, the crackling noise and dreadful blaze
Call'd up some waking lover to the fight;
And long it was ere he the rest could raise,
Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night. Dryden.

EYESERVANT. n. f. [eye and servant.] A servant that works only while watched.

EYESERVICE. n. f. [eye and service.] Service performed only under inspection.

Servants obey in all things your masters; not with eyeservice as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart. Col.

EY'ESHOT. n. f. [eye and shot.] Sight; glance; view.

I must not think of sharing the booty before I am free from danger, and out of eyeshot from the other windows. Dryden.

I have preserved many a young man from her eyeshot by this means. Spectator.

EY'ESIGHT. n. f. [eye and sight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompensed me according to my cleanness in his eyesight. 2 Sam.

Merhinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale. Shakspeare.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease, Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eyesight exposes daily men abroad. Milton.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jopata, where these events happened. Wilkins' Math. Magic.

He blinds the wife, gives eyesight to the blind,
And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind. Dryden.

EY'ESORE. n. f. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.

Fy, doff this habit; shame to your estate,
And eyesore to our solemn festival. Shakspeare.

As soon as the two lords came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore. Clarendon.

Mordecai was an eyesore to Haman. L'Estr.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyesore in his whole body. Dryden.

EYESPOTTED. adj. [eye and spot.] Marked with spots like eyes.

Nor Juno's bird, in her eyespotted train,
So many goodly colours doth contain. Spenser.

EY'ESTRING. n. f. [eye and string.] The string of the eye; the tendon by which the eye is moved.

I would have broke mine eyestrings; crackt them, but
To look upon him. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

To know whether the sheep are found or not, see that their gums be red and the eyestrings ruddy. Mortimer.

EY'ETOOTH. n. f. [eye and tooth.] The tooth in the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders; the fang.

The next tooth on each side stronger and deeper rooted, and more pointed, called canini, in English eyeteeth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments. Ray on the Creation.

EY'EWINK. n. f. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token.

They would have won any woman's heart;
and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her. Shakspeare.

EYEWITNESS. n. f. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence; one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 2 Peter.

E Y R

To meet him all his saints, who silent stood Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
With jubilee advanc'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison on the Christian Religion.

EYRE. n. f. [eyre, French; iter, Latin.]
The court of justices itinerants; and justices in

E Y R

eyre are those only, which Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down to that purpose.
Cowell.

EY'RY. n. f. [from ey an egg.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

E Y R

But I was born so high,
Our eyrie buildeth in the cedars top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

The eagle, and the stork,
On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build. Milton.
Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,
Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.
Dryden.

F.

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CEUS. adj. [fabaceus, Lat.] Having the nature of a bean. Diſc.

FA'BLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula,
Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison.

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable-makers,
He never sow'd on Almain acres. Dryden.

Palladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A vitious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives fables.

1 Timothy.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet:
this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lie; a vitious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

F A B

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

To FA'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie: a familiar use.
He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shaksp.

To FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.
We mean to win,
Or turn this heaven itself into the hell
Thou fablest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd
Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since
Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FA'BLEM. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickel.

FA'BLER. n. f. [from fable.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories.

To FA'BRICATE. v. a. [fabricor, Lat.]

1. To build; to construct.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRICA'TION. n. f. [from fabricate.]
The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth
the first rudiments of the human nature.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FA'BRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Wotton.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

F A C

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

To FA'BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.]
To build; to form; to construct.

Shew what laws of life
The cheefe inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Philips.

FA'BULIST. n. f. [fabuliste, French.] A writer of fables.

Quitting Æsop and the fabulists, he copies Boccace. Croxal.
Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Garrick.

FABULO'SITY. n. f. [fabulositas, Latin.] Fulness of feigned stories; fabulous invention.

In their fabulosity they report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years. Abbot.

FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Latin.]
Feigned; full of fables, or invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless.
Addison's Spectator.

FA'BULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown.

FACE. n. f. [face, French, from facies,
Latin.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses,
that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In every face I found a dart. Addison's Spect.

2. Countenance; cast of the features;
look; air of the face.

Kick'd out, we set the best face on't we could.

Dryden's Virgil.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing.
A mist watered the whole face of the ground.
Genesis.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezekiel.

5. Visible state of affairs.

He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd,

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.

Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;

For such are treasons. Ben Jonson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,

Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Prefence; sight; state of confrontation.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Numbers.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking, by his face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Estrange.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tillotson.

9. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? Shakspeare.

FACE to FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

1. When both parties are present.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face. Acts.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.

Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face. I Cor.

To FACE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite.

Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,
To face to forge, to scoff, to company. Hub. Tale.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.

Face about, man; a soldier, and afraid of the enemy! Dryden.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice refoind
Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain, Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dryden.

To FACE. v. a.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face
This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle. Addison on the War.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence: commonly with down.

We trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.
Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the Circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it. Addison on Italy.

The temple is described square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world. Pope.

4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

The fortification of Soleurre is faced with marble. Addison.

Where your old bank is hollow, face it with the first spit of earth that you dig out of the ditch. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FACELESS. adj. [from face.] Being without a face. Bailey.

Georgione, the cotemporary of Titian, excelled in portraits or facepainting. Dryden.

FACET. n. f. [facette, French.] A small surface; a superficies cut into several angles.

Honour that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection, like diamonds cut with facets. Bacon.

FACETIOUS. adj. [facetieux, French; facelia, Latin.] Gay; cheerful; lively; merry; witty. It is used both of persons and sentiments.

Socrates, informed of some derogating speeches used of him behind his back, made this facetious reply, Let him beat me too when I am absent. Government of the Tongue.

FACETIOUSLY. adv. [from facetious.] Gayly; cheerfully; wittily; merrily.

FACETIOUSNESS. n. f. [from facetious.] Cheerful wit; mirth; gayety.

FACILE. adj. [facile, Fr. facilis, Lat.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant. Milton on Education.

To confine the imagination 'is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo. Glanville.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful. Evelyn's Kal.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious. Wilkins.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,
Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride,

I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosom to reside. Ben Jonson.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,
Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd. Milton.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gainsay;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

Since Adam, and his facile consort Eve Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way. Calamy.

To FACILITATE. v. a. [faciliter, Fr.]

To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work. Bacon.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted canon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution. Dryden's Dufresney.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.

FACILITY. n. f. [facilité, French; facilitas, Latin.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason faith, reason should have ability
To hold these worldly things in such proportion,
As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney.

Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors. Dryden's Dufresney.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without them. Bacon.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good-nature; tenderness without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Estrange.

4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire. South.

FACINERIOUS. adj. [corrupted by Shakspeare from facinorous; facinus, facinoris, Latin.] Wicked; facinorous.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facinorous spirit that will not acknowledge it. Shakspeare.

FACING. n. f. [from To face.] An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness. Wotton.

FACINOROUS. adj. [facinora, Lat.]
Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. s. [from facinorous.]
Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT. n. s. [factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact they say there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgment; we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised all throughout the world. Hooker.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied. South's Sermons.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison.

Manifold sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,
'Tis love of honour and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FACTION. n. s. [faction, French; factio, Latin.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd
Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shaksp.

He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factious. Shakspere's Timon.

By one of Simon's faction murders were committed. Mac.

By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancing of any factious. K. Charles.

2. Tumult; discord; dissension.

They remained at Newbery in great faction
among themselves. Clarendon.

FACTIONARY. n. s. [factionnaire, Fr.]

One of a faction; a party man. Not in use.

Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius;
always factionary of the party of your general. Shakspere's Coriolanus.

FACTIOUS. adj. [factieux, French.]

1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publickly dissentious; addicted to form parties and raise publick disturbances.

He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakspere's Henry vi.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
Shakspere's Julius Caesar.

2. Proceeding from publick dissensions; tending to publick discord.

Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,

Assemble; and harangues are heard; but soon
In factious opposition. Milton's Par. Lost.

Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses. King Charles.

Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design? Dryden.

FACTIOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissentious or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented. King Charles.

FACTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from factious.] Inclination to publick dissension; violent clamorousness for a party.

FACTITIOUS. adj. [factitious, Latin.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, or easily brought to incorporate. Boyle.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant, all other stones being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

FACTOR. n. s. [facteur, Fr. factor, Latin.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakspere.
Piercy is but my factor, good my lord,
T' engross up glorious deeds on my behalf. Shakspere's Henry iv.

You all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods. Shakspere.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate. Raleigh.

The Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade. Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects, and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate,
and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church,
and that, therefore, they ought to be taken away. South.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne,
He made all countries where he came his own;
And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,
A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FACTORY. n. s. [from factor.]

1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.

2. The traders embodied in one place.

FACTOTUM. n. s. [fac totum, Latin. It is used likewise in burlesque French.] A servant employed alike in all kinds of business; as Scrub in the Stratagem.

FACTURE. n. s. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing.

FACULTY. n. s. [faculté, French; facultas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability; whether corporeal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hooker.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides,
Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.
Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties

Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the midway faint. Milton.

8. Equal; just.

The king did so much desire a peace, that no man need advise him to it, or could divert him from it, if fair and honourable conditions of peace were offered to him. Clarendon.

9. Not effected by any insidious or unlawful methods; not foul.

After all these conquests he pass'd the rest of his age in his own native country, and died a fair and natural death. Temple.

10. Not practising any fraudulent or insidious arts: as, a fair rival, a fair disputant.

Virtuous and vicious ev'ry man must be,
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;

The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise.
Pope.

11. Open; direct.

For still, methought, she sung not far away;
At last I found her on a laurel-spray:
Close by my side she sat, and fair in sight,
Full in a line, against her opposite. Dryden.

12. Gentle; mild; not compulsory.

All the lords came in, and, being by fair means wrought thereunto, acknowledged king Henry.
Spenser on Ireland.

fairest, and took away a dozen ounces of blood.
Wiseman.

17. Liberal; not narrow.

He through his virtue was as free from greediness,
as through his fair livelihood, far from neediness.
Carew.

FAIR. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. Gently; decently; without violence.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end, than he that runs after every one, though he gallop. Locke.

2. Civilly; complaisantly.

Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair. Shakspeare.

One of the company spoke him fair, and would have stop't his mouth with a crust. L'Estrange.

In this plain fable you th' effect may see
Of negligence, and fond credulity;
And learn besides of flatt'ers to beware,
Then most pernicious when they speak too fair.
Dryden.

His promise Palamon accepts; but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made:
Thus fair they parted, 'till the morrow's dawn;
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn.
Dryden.

Kalib ascend, my fair spoke servant rise,
And soothe my heart with pleasing prophecies.
Dryden.

This promised fair at first. Addison.

3. Happily; successfully.

At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

65. FALL is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart or correlative.

To FALL. v. a.

1. To drop; to let fall.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop, she falls, would prove a crocodile.
Shakspeare's Othello.

Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo. Shakspeare's Tempest.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryden.

2. To sink; to depress: the contrary to raise.

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halves, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon's Natural History.

3. To diminish; to let sink: opposed to raise.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.

They then conceiving, did in yearning time
Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. Shakspeare.

FALL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of dropping from on high.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.
Dryden's Aeneid.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth, and did tear it. Shakspeare.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.

My son coming in to his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esdras.

Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a sop, or otherwise, stayeth above; and if once mingled, it severeth not again, as oil doth. Bacon.

A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke.

Some were hurt by the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Gulliver's Travels.

4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.

Wail his fall,
Whom I myself struck down. Shakspeare.

Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith.

I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdras.

5. Ruin; dissolution.

Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight

Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time,
or fire,

Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Denham.

6. Downfal; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness, or from virtue to corruption. In a sense like this we say the fall of man, and the fall of angels.

Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney.

Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint: why here I live alone;
And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel.

He, careless now of int'rest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope.

7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.

Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker.

8. Diminution; decrease of value.

That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.

9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of musick.

That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South
That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odours. Shakspeare.

How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness 'till it smil'd! Milton.

10. Declivity; steep descent.

Waters when beat upon the shore, or straitned, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon.

11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakspeare.

A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisdom.

Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murmur'ing falls. Dryden.

The swain, in barren deserts, with surprise
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murmur'ing in his ear. Pope.

Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope's St. Cecilia.

Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.

15. The act of felling or cutting down: as, the fall of timber.

FALLACIOUS. adj. [fallax, Latin; fallacieux, French.]

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.

The Jews believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies. South.

2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapour bland
Abo ut their spirits had play'd, and in inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton.

False philosophy inspires Fallacious hope. Milton.

FALLACIOUSLY. adv. [from fallacious.] Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unsound reasoning.

We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us. Brown.

We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addis.

FALLACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from fallacious.] Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.

FALLACY. n. f. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, French.] Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.

Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument, thinking themselves must kings when the subject is most basely subjected. Sidney.

Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy. Shaksp.

It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Bacon.

All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.

FALLIBILITY. n. f. [from fallible.] Liableness to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.

There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet some things we may be almost as certain of, as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred. Watts.

FALLIBLE. adj. [fallo, Latin.] Liable to error; such as may be deceived.

Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. Shaksp.

He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, often fail his expectations. Taylor.

Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. Watts.

FALLING. } n. f. [from fall.] In-
FALLING in. } denting opposed to pro-

Shall saints in civil bloodshed wallow
Of saints, and let the cause lie fallow? Hudibras.

FALLOW. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Ground plowed in order to be plowed again.

The plowing of fallows is a benefit to land. Mortimer.

The best ploughs to plow up summer fallow with. Mortimer.

2. Ground lying at rest.

Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd. Rowe's Jane Shore.

To FALLOW. v. n. To plow in order to a second plowing.

Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer.

FALLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.

Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
S' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness. Donne.

FALSE. adj. [falsus, Latin; faux, fausse, French.]

1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.

Innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. Shakspere.
There are false witnesses among men. L'Estrange.

2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.

For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
Of ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?

Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew. Davies.

A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Succedaneous; supposititious.

Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of course canvass: fill it with earth above the canvass. Bacon's Natural History.

He fell, as a huge rocky cliff,
Whose false foundation waves have wash'd away,
With dreadful poise is from the main land rest. Fairy Queen.

When that flood in its own depths was drown'd,
It left behind it false and slipp'ry ground. Dryd.

The heart of man looks fair, but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us. L'Estrange.

5. Not agreeable to rule, or propriety.

Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate. Shaksp.

6. Not honest; not just.

The true prince may, for recreation, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance. Shakspere.

Men are sponges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive. Denne.

7. Treacherous; perfidious; traiterous; deceitful; hollow.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shakspere.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shakspere.

A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon.

So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wile,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free. Dryden.

The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryden's Virgil.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real: as, a false diamond.

False tear true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's Æneid.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.

What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shaksp.

To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.] This word is now out of use.

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

It's not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsedst hath thy faith with perjury? Fairy Q.

2. To deceive.

Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falsed fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. F. Queen.

3. To defeat; to balk; to evade.
But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wife, and closely did await Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rise;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed oft his blows t' illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.

FALSEHEARTED. adj. [false and heart.]
Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful;
hollow.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon.

FALSEHOOD. n. f. [from false.]
1. Want of truth; want of veracity.
Artificer of fraud; he was the first
That practis'd falsehood under faintly show. Milton.

All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceit-fulness; perfidy.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton.

3. A lie; a false assertion.
In your answers there remains falsehood. Job.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.
For no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton.

FALSELY. adv. [from false.]
1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing profelytes and religion. Government of the Tongue.

Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim.
Dryden's Ann. Mir.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request.
Dryden's Aureng.

Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret repentments. Addison's Spectator.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.
He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalridge.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.
FALSENESS. n. f. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.
2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity,
and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to personated devotion. Hammond.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.
King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FALSER. n. f. [from false.] A deceiver;
a hypocrite. Obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such falses' friendship been fain. Spenser's Past.

FALSIFI'ABLE. adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICATION. n. f. [falsification,
French; from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this isle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Broome.

FALSIFIER. n. f. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs.
Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others that put their shams the worst together. L'Estrange.

TO FALSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, proposeth that to the people of God as scripture, which is in truth no scripture. Hooker.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.
Spenser on Ireland.

Falsifying the balance by deceit. Amos.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish æconomy, when Jews and pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate. Knolles' History.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust. Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'lines fill'd. Dryd.

Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there:

why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:

*Ma si l' Ussergo d'Ambr era perfetto,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto.*

Ariosto, cant. xxvi.

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified: for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalize the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

TO FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FALSITY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?
And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities.
Glanville's Sceptis.

TO FALTER. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spanish; vaultur, a flammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,

Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryden.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his look, declare him guilty.
Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shaksp.

He found his legs falter. Wiseman's Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far idiots are concerned in the want of weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Lecke.

TO FALTER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse.

This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, feeds, and oats.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

FALTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FA'MBLE. v. n. [famler, Danish.]

To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

FAME. n. f. [fama, Latin; φάμα.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries. Chronicles.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie uselefs. Addison's Spectator.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,

The owner's wife which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Joshua.

I shall shew what are true fames. Bacon.

FA'MED. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shakspeare.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god, Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode, Since Phlegian robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to christianity. Addison.

FA'MELESS. adj. [from fame.] Having no fame; without renown. Not in use.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods, The fruitful water'd vales and running floods. May's Virgil.

FAMILIAR. adj. [familiaris, Latin.]

1. Domestick; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shakspeare.

Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shakspeare.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalandar freight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker.

Let us chuse such noble counsel, That war, or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shaksp.

Our sweet Recess and only consolation left Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradise Lost.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts on the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd

In temper and in nature, will receive Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation. Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain, Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He unreins

His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation. Camden.

FAMILIAR. n. f.

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar. Shakspeare.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his familiars, this affects him. Rogers.

2. A demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love. Shakspeare.

FAMILIARITY. n. f. [familiarité, Fr. from familiar.]

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds. Atterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

To FAMILIARIZE. v. a. [familiariser, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude; to make common.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison's Spectator.

FAMILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes Do use you for my fool, and chat with you, Your sawciness will jest upon my love. Shaksp.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the tilt-yard, and then he broke his head. Shakspeare.

The governor came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down. Bacon.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's History.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence, And without method talks us into sense; Will, like a friend, familiarly convey The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope.

FAMILLE. [en famille, French.] In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great Chuse for companions tete-a-tete; Who at their dinners, en famille, Get leave to sit whene'er you will. Swift.

FA'MILY. n. f. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites.

Numbers.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood

Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood, Go and complain thy family is young, Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long. Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry. Bacon.

FA'MINE. n. f. [famine, French; fames, Latin.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength

Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie, 'Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shaksp.

Famines have not been of late observed, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale.

This city never felt a siege before, But from the lake receiv'd its daily store; Which now shut up, and millions crowded here, Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryden.

To FAMISH. v. a. [from fames, Lat. famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shaksp.

The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel, And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air

Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross, And famish him of breath if not of bread. Milton.

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish. Shakspeare.

FA'MISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent, Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou, Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment, In poison'd potion drank't. Hakewill.

FAMOUSITY. n. f. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity. Diſt.

FA'MOUS. adj. [fameux, French; famosus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the fifth, too famous to live long;

England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Numbers.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ezek.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peasam on Drawing.

I shall be nam'd among the famous Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, turned into English by Fairfax. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shakspeare.

FA'MOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace Shakspeare.
They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew's Cosmologia.

FA'MOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [vannus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry. Shakspeare.

Flavia, the least and lightest toy
Can with resistless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame. Atterbury.
The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [van, French.]

Flaile, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong. Tusser.

Asse shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Isaiah.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakspeare.

For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wicker-fan, or a fan with sails. Mort.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner, with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to in flame that love. Hooker.

TO FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakspeare's Coriol.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:

From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
'Till ev'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:

The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cym. and Iphig.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,

And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand
In judgment. Milton.

FANA'TICISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANA'TICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, French.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

FANA'TICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine, than the tumultuary weapon snatcht up by a fanatic. Decay of Piety.

FA'NCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings? and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would shew as much singularity to deny this,
as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth.

FA'NCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FA'NCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addiction to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness, towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale.

FA'NCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.] It should be phansy.

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakspeare, fancy's sweetest child!
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,

Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which gives as full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:

Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature:

Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of forriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on? Shakspeare.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakspeare.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakspeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakspeare.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbutnot.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies:
the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Baron's Natural History.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders. Mortimer.

TO FA'NCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Strutt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginings furnish us with. Locke.

TO FA'NCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;

Who mighty thought can clothe with manly drefs,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er exprefs.

Dryden's Juvenal.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband.

Raleigh's History.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy.

Swift.

FA'NCYMONGER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forests, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Shakspeare.

FA'NCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unbound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancysick, there's no cure.

L'Estrange.

FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by tryal he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate.

Spenser.

FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Lat.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Nor fane nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege!

Shakspeare's Coriol.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now she seem'd.

Dryden's Aeneid.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shar'd.

Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb.

Tickel.

The fields are ravish'd from the industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes.

Pope.

FANFARON. n. f. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

Virgil makes Aeneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector.

Dryden.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it.

L'Estrange.

FANFARONA'DE. n. f. [from fanfaron, French.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of monsieur Bouffleurs.

Swift.

To FANG. v. a. [fangan, Saxon; vangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To vang is yet used in Devonshire

Destruction fang mankind!

Shaks. Timon.

FANG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; any thing like them.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery.

Shakspeare's As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, falmons, and dogs, though less.

Bacon.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain The bulk; the bulk unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground.

Addison.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

FA'NGED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,

Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain.

Philips' Briton.

FANGLE. n. f. [from fengan, Sax. to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new: as, new fangles, new fanglenefs.

FA'NGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new-fashioned; dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant.

Afcham.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers.

FA'NGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

FA'NGOT. n. f. A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one to two hundred weight three quarters.

DiA.

FA'NNEL. n. f. [fanon, French.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mals-priest when he officiates.

DiA.

FA'NNER. n. f. [from fan.] One that plays a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her.

Jeremiah.

FA'NTASIED. adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or imaginations.

As I travell'd hither through the land,
I found the people strangely fantasied.

Shaks.

FA'NTASM. n. f. [See PHANTASM.] A thing not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FANTA'STICAL. } adj. [fantastique, Fr. FANTA'STICK. } from fantasy.]

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of.

South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present feats

Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination.

Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew?

Shakspeare.

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.

Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastick wheel.

Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.

Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd conceited true love knots:
To be fantastick, may become a youth
Of greater time than I.

Shakspeare.

Duvmir is provided with an imperious, expensive, and fantastick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife.

Tatler.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed.

Addison.

FANTA'STICALLY. adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.

2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Shakspeare.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with imagination.

One cannot so much as fantastically chuse, even or odd, he thinks not why.

Grew's Cosmol.

FANTA'STICALNESS. } n. f. [from fan- FANTA'STICKNESS. } tastical.]

1. Humorousness; mere compliance with fancy.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I dare not assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it.

Tillotson, Pref.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

FANTASY. n. f. [fantaisie, French; phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio! you tremble and look pale!

Is not this something more than fantasy?

Shak.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unconstant than the wind. Shaksp.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shaksp.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shaksp.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell. Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there. Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the sug'ry sweet thereof allure, Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure. Hubb. Ta.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whitgiste.

FA'NTOM. n. f. [See PHANTOM.] Something not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakspeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, fir, was, as they say, cathiered. Shakspeare.

FAR. adv. [reop, Saxon; fatt, Erse.]

1. To great extent in length.

Pay sacred rev'rence to Apollo's song,
Left wrathful the far-shooting god omit
His fatal arrows. Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This is less proper.

Vast and great
Is what I love; the far extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer. Prior.
With costly cates Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord:
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far-fam'd mistress of mankind. Arbutnot.

From the same lineage stern Aætes came,
The far-fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame. Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far As who goes farthest. Shaksp. Julius Cæsar.
Is it far you ride?

—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakspeare's Mach.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who fought his destiny. Dryden.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends affection either ceased or prevailed. Sidn.
In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto. Hooker.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near. Hubberd's Tale.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties used towards them, which had their reward soon after. Bacon's Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army. Knolles.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain. Milton.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy. L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice. Dryden.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryden.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe. Dryden's Persius.

Far off you view them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch. Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find quite the contrary. Locke.
'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country in the western world. Addison's Ovid.

5. To a distance.

As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him. Psalms.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor. Raleigh.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd Contending, and remov'd his tents far off. Milton.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet's Theory.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well poiz'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart. Addison's Ovid.

6. In a great part.

When they were by Jebus the day was far spent. Judges.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees. It is commonly used with some word noting the comparative, but Dryden has used it absolutely.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. Proverbs.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air. Bacon's Nat. History.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world. Bacon.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are. Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillotson.

Latin is a more succinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them. Dryden.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryd.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest. Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care. Pope.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakspeare.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

—You speak him far.
—I don't extend him, sir. Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

Answer them

How far forth you do like their articles.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve. Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance. Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it. Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjuga-tions. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. FAR off. At a great distance.

For though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton.

11. FAR off. To a great distance.

Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.

12. Off is joined with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: as, I set the boat far off, I set the boat far from me.

13. FAR is used often in composition: as, farshooting, farseeing.

FAR-FETCH. n. f. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick farfetches;
And from their Coptick priest, Kircherus, Found out this mystick way to jeer us. Hudib.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.
Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the farfetch'd spoil. Milton.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetch'd gold into the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize. Dryden.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

York, with all his farfetch'd policy. Shaksp.
For far-fetched rhymes make puzzled angels strain,

And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable farfetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.]

Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her fire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal column which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault and prop the spheres. Pope's Odyssey.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.]

Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Aeneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Aeneas came;
Great Jove he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good. Dryden's Aeneid.

FAR. adj.

1. Distant; remote.

A man taking a far journey. Mark.
But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching of the freezing zone;
And some to far Oaxis shall be sold,
To try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold. Dryden.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable, Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shaksp.

If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. From FAR. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deuteronomy.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses The far side from the near. Dryden.

5. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be adjective or adverb: as, The nations far and near center'd in choice. Dryden.

FAR. n. f. [contracted from farrow.]

The offspring of a sow; young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year, Are for to be made of and counted full dear; For now is the loss of the far of the sow More great than the loss of two calves of the cow. Tusser.

To FARCE. v. a. [farcio, Latin; farcir, French.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended founder, or at least it ministered some stuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew.

The first principles of christian religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets. Bp. Sanderfon.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball, The sword, the mace, the crown imperial, The entervest'd robe of gold and pearl, The farced title running 'fore the king. Shaksp.

FARCE. n. f. [from the verb; or from farcir, French, to mock.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false: that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind; grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

What should be great, you turn to farce. Prior. They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FARICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farical, because they are actually in nature. Gay.

FARCY. n. f. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

FARDEL. n. f. [fardello, Italian; fardeau, French.] A bundle; a little pack.

Let us to the king: there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard. Shaksp.

Who would fardels bear, To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shaksp.

To FARE. v. n. [fapan, Saxon; varen, Dutch.]

1. To go; to pass; to travel.

At last, resolving forward still to fare, Until the blust'ring storm is overblown. Fairy Queen.

His spirits pure were subject to our fight, Like to a man in shew and shape he fares. Fairfax.

So on he fares, and to the border comes Of Eden. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore; Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.

2. To be in any state good or bad.

So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend. Fairy Queen.

A stubborn heart shall fare evil at the last. Eccles.

Well fare the hand, which to our humble sight Presents that beauty. Waller.

So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd, Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard: As ships, though never so obsequious, fall Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.

So fares the stag among th' enraged hounds: Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Denham.

But as a barque, that, in foul weather, Toss'd by two adverse winds together, Is bruist and beaten to and fro, And knows not which to turn him to; So far'd the knight between two foes, And knew not which of them t' oppose. Hudib.

If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Estrange.

Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows Amidst the crowd. Dryden's Aeneid.

English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animosities of the nation. Addison's Freeholder.

Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours. Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad.

Thus it fareth when too much desire of contradiction causeth our speeches rather to pass by number than to stay for weight. Hooker.

So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an impersonal form.

When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, 'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

The rich man fares sumptuously every day. Luke.

Feast your ears with the musick awhile, if they will fare so harshly, as on the trumpet's sound. Shakspere's Timon.

Men think they have fares hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.

He found a ship going to Tarhish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarhish. Jonah.

He passage begs with unregarded pray'r, And wants two farthings to discharge his fare. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.

But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play, As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton. But when the western winds with vital pow'r Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r, Then, at the last, produce in open air Both flocks, and send them to their summer's fare. Dryden.

This is what nature's want may well suffice; He that would more is covetous, not wise:

But since among mankind so few there are, Who will conform to philosophick fare, This much I will indulge thee for thy ease, And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden's Juvenal.

Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison.

FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb farewell, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in bonum rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time, use familiarized it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell, king: fith thus thou wilt appear, Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shakspere's King Lear.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not, Therefore our everlasting farewell take; For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shaksp.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakspere.

An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes; And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night, For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight. Dryden.

Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell From his faint lips, but she replied farewell. Dryden.

O queen, farewell! be still possesst Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest! Pope's Odyssey.

Commission of the brain,
Run on and rage, sweat, censure, and condemn,
They were not made for thee, lest thou for them. Ben Jonson.

A squeamish fastidious niceness, in meats and drinks, must be cured by starving. L'Estrange.

All hopes, raised upon the promises or supposed kindnesses of the fastidious and fallacious great ones of the world, shall fail. South.

FASTIDIOUSLY. adv. [from fastidious.]
Disdainfully; contemptuously; squea-mishly.

Their sole talent is pride and scorn: they look fastidiously, and speak disdainfully, concluding, if a man shall fall short of their garniture at their knees and elbows, he is much inferior to them in the furniture of his head. Gov. of the Tongue.

FASTIGIATED. adj. [fastigiatus, Lat.]

Roofed; narrowed up to the top. Diæ.

FA'STINGDAY. n. f. [fast and day.]
Day of mortification by religious abstinence.

Do not call it a fastingday, unless also it be a day of extraordinary devotion and of alms. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

FA'STNESS. n. f. [from fast.]

1. State of being fast.

2. Firmness; firm adherence.

Such as had given the king distaste, did contend by their forwardness to shew it was but their fastness to their former government, and that those affections ended with the time. Bacon.

3. Strength; security.

All the places are cleared, and places of fastness laid open, which are the proper walls and castles of the Irish, as they were of the British in the times of Agricola. Davies on Ireland.

The foes had left the fastness of their place,
Prevail'd in fight, and had his men in chace. Dryden's Æneid.

4. A strong place; a place not easily forced.

If his adversary be not well aware of him, he entrenches himself in a new fastness, and holds out the siege with a new artillery. Watts.

1. Predestination; predetermined order or series of things and events; preordination of inevitable causes acting invincibly in perpetual succession.

The stoicks held a fatalité, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

2. Decree of fate.

By a strange fatality men suffer their dissenting to be drawn into the stream of the present vogue. King Charles.

All the father's precautions could not secure the son from the fatality of dying by a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Tendency to danger; tendency to some great or hazardous event.

Seven times seven, or forty-nine, nine times nine, or eighty-one, and seven times nine, or the years sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown.

FA'TALLY. adv. [from fatal.]

1. Mortally; destructively, even to death.

The stream is so transparent, pure and clear,
That had the self-enamoured youth gaz'd here,
So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,
While he the bottom, not his face, had seen. Denham.

'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,
Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow,
When fatally their virtue they approve;
Cheerful in flames, and martyrs of their love. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

2. By the decree of fate; by inevitable and invincible determination.

To say that the world was made casually by the concurrence of atoms, is to affirm that the atoms compos'd the world mechanically and fatally; only they were not sensible of it. Bentley.

FA'TALNESS. n. f. [from fatal.] Inevincible necessity.

FATE. n. f. [fatum, Latin.]

1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.

F A T

Necessity or chance

Approach not me; and what I will is fate. Milton.

There is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate. Dryd.
You must obey me soon or late;
Why will you vainly struggle with your fate? Dryden.

When empire in its childhood first appears,
A watchful fate o'ersees its rising years. Dryden.
Random chance, or wilful fate,
Guides the shaft from Cupid's bow. A. Philips.

They were invited from all parts for the use of kings, princes, and ministers. And in short, the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Temple.

3. Kindness granted; benevolence shown.
All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites. Sidney.

The race is not to the swift, nor yet favour to men of skill. Eccles.

O, my royal master!
The gods, in favour to you, made her cruel. A. Philips.

4. Lenity; mildness; mitigation of punishment.

I could not discover the lenity and favour of this sentence; but conceived it rather to be rigorous than gentle. Swift.

5. Leave; good will; pardon.

Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure,
—Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought
With things forgot. Shakspeare.

Yet ere we enter into open act,
With favour, 'twere no loss if 't might be inquir'd
What the condition of these aims would be. Ben Jonson.

Come down, said Raynard, let us treat of peace:

A peace, with all my soul, said Chanticleer;
But, with your favour, I will treat it here. Dryden.

6. Object of favour; person or thing favoured.

All these his wond'rous works, but chiefly man,
His chief delight and favour; him, for whom
All these his works so wond'rous he ordain'd. Milton.

7. Something given by a lady to be worn.

And every one his lovesuit will advance
Unto his several mistress, which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow. Shaks.
It is received that it helpeth to continue love, if one wear the hair of the party beloved; and perhaps a glove, or other like favour, may as well do it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A blue ribband tied round the sword-arm, I conceive to be the remains of that custom of wearing a mistress's favour on such occasions of old. Spectator.

8. Any thing worn openly as a token.

Here, Fluellen, wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap. Shakspeare. Henry v.

9. Feature; countenance. It is now little used.

That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in flut-tishness. Sidney.

Young though thou art, thine eye
Hath staid upon some favour that it loves. Shaks.
Disseat thy favour with an usurped beard.
Shakspeare's Othello.

There's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful, why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings? Shakspeare.
Yet well I remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me?
Shakspeare's Richard II.

A youth of fine favour and shape. Bacon.
By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritude of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.

FA'VOURABLE. adj. [favorable, Fr. favorabilis, Latin.]

1. Kind; propitious; affectionate.

Many good officers were willing to stay there, as a place very favourable for the making levies of
men. Clarendon.

5. Beautiful; well favoured; well featured. Obsolete.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Which do possess the empire of the air,
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Than Clarion the eldest son and heir
Of Muscarol. Spenser.

FA'VOURABLENESS. n. f. [from favourable.] Kindness; benignity.

FA'VOURABLY. adv. [from favourable.]
Kindly; with favour; with tenderness;
with kind regard.

Touching actions of common life, there is not any defence more favourably heard than theirs who allege sincerely for themselves, that they did as necessity constrained them. Hooker.

She goeth about seeking such as are worthy of her, and sheweth herself favourably unto them in the ways. Wisdom.

The violent will condemn the character of Absalom, as either too favourably or too hardly drawn. Dryden.

or foul way; with good or bad appearance.

FA'VOURER. n. f. [from favour.] One who favours; one who regards with kindness or tenderness; a wellwisher; a friend.

If we should upbraid them with irreligious, as they do us with superstitious favourers, the answer which herein they would make us, let them apply unto themselves. Hooker.

Do I not know you for a favourer
Of this new sect? ye are not sound. Shakspeare.
Being now a favourer to the Briton, Shakspeare.

Conjure their friends they had, labour for more,
Solicit all reputed favourers. Daniel's Civil War.
All the favourers of magick were the most profest and bitter enemies to the christian religion.
Addison.

FA'VOURITE. n. f. [favorite, French; favorita, Italian.]

1. A person or thing beloved; one regarded with favour; any thing in which pleasure is taken; that which is regarded with particular approbation or affection.

vourite* passages in an author. Addison. Spectator.

So fathers speak, persuasive speech and mild!
Their sage experience to the fav'rite child. Pope.

2. One chosen as a companion by a superior; a mean wretch whose whole business is by any means to please.

All favours and punishments passed by him,
all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites. Sidney.

I was a Theban gentleman, who, by mis-chance, having killed a favourite of the prince of that country, was pursued so cruelly, that in no place but by favour or corruption they would obtain my destruction. Sidney.

The great man down, you mark, his fav'rite
flies;

The poor advanc'd, makes friends of enemies.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Bid her steal into the plashed bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes that advance their pride
Against that power that bred it. Shakspeare.

Nothing is more vigilant, nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waning time, and suspect of satiety. Wotton.

This man was very capable of being a great favourite to a great king. Clarendon.

What fav'rites gain, and what the nation owes,
Fly the forgetful world. Pope.

Yet no where can her find; such happiness
Heaven doth me envy, and fortune favourless.
Fairy Queen.

FA'USEN. n. f. A sort of large eel.

He left the waves to wash;
The wave sprung entrails, about which fausens
and other fish
Did shole. Chapman's Iliads.

FA'USSEBRAYE. n. f. A small mount of earth, four fathom wide, erected on the level round the foot of the rampart, to fire upon the enemy, when he is so far advanced that you cannot force him back; and also to receive the ruins which the cannons make in the body of the place. Harris.

FA'UTOR. n. f. [Latin; fauteur, French.]
Favourer; countenancer; supporter.

I am neither author or fautor of any sect; I will have no man addict himself to me; but if I have any thing right, defend it as truth's, not mine. Ben Jonson.

The new mountain in the Lucrine lake, which is alleged, by the fautors of this opinion, as an instance in behalf of it, was not raised thus.
Woodward.

2. To court by any means. Used of animals.

Instead thereof he kiss'd her weary feet,
 And lick'd her lily hands with fawning tongue,
 As he her wrong'd innocence did weat. Fairy Queen.

Is it not strange that a rational man should worship an ox? that he should fawn upon his dog? bow himself before a cat? and adore leeks and garlick? South.

3. To court servilely.

My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns;
 What danger or what sorrow can befall thee,
 So long as Edward is thy constant friend? Shak.

And thou, fly hypocrite, who now would'st be Patron of liberty, who more than thou
 Once fawn'd, and cring'd, and servilely ador'd Heav'n's awful monarch? Milton's Par. Lost.

Whom Ancus follows, with a fawning air;
 But vain within, and proudly popular. Dryden.

Dext'rous the craving fawning croud to quit,
 And pleas'd to 'scape from flattery to wit. Pope.

4. To bring forth a fawn.

FAWN. n. f. A servile cringe; low flattery.

You will rather shew our gentle lowts
 How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them
 For the inheritance of their loves. Shakspeare.

FA'WNER. n. f. [from fawn.] One that fawns; one that pays servile courtship.

By softness of behaviour we have arrived at the appellation of fawners. Spectator.

Fear, in general, is that passion of our nature whereby we are excited to provide for our security upon the approach of evil. Rogers.

2. Awe; dejection of mind at the presence of any person or thing; terror impressed: with of before that which impresseth.

And the fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast. Genesis.

3. Anxiety; solicitude.

The principal fear was for the holy temple. Mac.

4. That which causes fear.

Antony, stay not by his side:
 Thy demon, that's the spirit that keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
 Where Cæsar is not; but near him, thy angel Becomes a fear, as being over-power'd. Shak.

5. The object of fear.

Except the God of Abraham and the fear of Isaac had been with me. Genesis.

6. Something hung up to scare deer by its colour or noise.

He who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit, and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare. Isaiah.

FEAR. n. f. [feopa, Saxon.] A companion. Obsolete.

But fair Clarissa to a lovely fear
 Was linked, and by him had many pledges dear. Fairy Queen.

To FEAR. v. a. [feapan, Saxon.]

1. To dread; to consider with apprehensions of terror; to be afraid of.

Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.
 —Then never trust me if I be afraid

—You are very sensible, yet you mis's my sense;
 I mean Hortensio is afraid of you. Shakspeare.

To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
 Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe. Shakspeare's Richard II.

There shall rise up a kingdom, and it shall be feared above all the kingdoms before it. 2 Esd.

When I view the beauties of thy face,
 I fear not death, nor dangers, nor disgrace. Dryden.

2. To fright; to terrify; to make afraid.

The inhabitants, being feared with the Spaniards landing and burning, fled from their dwellings. Carew.

We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
 Setting it up to fear the birds of prey. Shaks.

Some sitting on the hatches, would seem there,
 With hideous gazing, to fear away fear. Donne.

To FEAR. v. n.

1. To live in terror; to be afraid.

Well you may fear too far.

—Safer than trust too far;

Let me still take away the arms I fear,
 Nor fear still to be harm'd. Shakspeare.

If any such be here, if any fear
 Less for his person than an ill report;
 If any think brave death outweighs bad life.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

2. To be anxious.

Then let the greedy merchant fear

For his ill-gotten gain;

And pray to gods that will not hear,
 While the debating winds and billows bear
 His wealth into the main. Dryden's Horace.

See, pious king, with diff'rent strife,
 Thy struggling Albion's bosom torn:

So much the fears for William's life,
 That Mary's fate she dare not mourn. Prior.

ties for certainties, possibilities for feasibilities, and things impossible for possibilities themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FEASIBLE. adj. [faissible, Fr.] Practicable; such as may be effected; such as may be done.

We conclude many things impossibilities, which yet are easy feasibles. Glanville's Scep-sis.

Things are feasible in themselves; else the eternal wisdom of God would never have advised, and much less have commanded them. South.

FEASIBLY. adv. [from feasible.] Practicably.

FEAST. n. f. [seste, French; festum, Lat.]

1. An entertainment of the table; a sumptuous treat of great numbers.

Here's our chief guest. If he had been forgotten,

It had been as a gap in our great feast. Shaksp.
On Pharaoh's birthday he made a feast unto all his servants. Genesis.

The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast,
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;
When lo! a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train. Dryden.

2. An anniversary day of rejoicing either on a civil or religious occasion: opposed to a fast.

FEE. n. f. [feoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]
1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord.
All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Corwell.
Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name. Hubb. Ta.
Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakspeare.

2. Property; peculiar.
What concern they?
The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakspeare.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.
These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Hubb. Ta.
Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me? Shaksp.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.
Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shak.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.
He does not refuse doing a good office for a man because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.
In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tuffer.

FE'EFARM. n. f. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held of a superiour lord.
John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in feefarm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was possess with fear. Davies

O wretched state of man in self-division! O well thou say'st a feeling declaration Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision! Sidney.

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.
Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears

Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Shakspeare.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FE'ELING. n. f. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore?
Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shak.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.
Bacon's Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FE'ELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shaksp.
He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.

His brother's image to his mind appears, Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet
with fears. Pope.

FE'ETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Bouloin broched three feetless birds, called allerions, upon his arrow. Camden.

To FEIGN. v. a. [feindre, French;  fingo, Latin.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
Gorgons, and hydras, and chimæras dire!
Milton.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most filthy sculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

3. To make a show of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,

As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.
Fairy Queen.

To FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;

Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But musick for the time doth change his nature.
Shakspeare.

FE'IGNEDLY. adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly
in some of the heathens. Bacon.

FEIGNER. n. f. [from feign.] Inventer; contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poesy, and the poet. Ben Jonson.

FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, French.] Counterfeit; seeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT. n. f. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.

Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off.
Spektor.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part, when another is intended to be struck.

But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares
For well-bred feints and future wars. Prior.

FE'LANDERS. n. f. Worms in hawks.

To FELICITATE. v. a. [feliciter, French; felicito, Latin.]

1. To make happy.

I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love. Shakspeare.

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey! Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches,
felicitating the good, or depreciating the evil to follow. Brown.

FELICITA'TION. n. f. [French; from felicitate.] Congratulation.

FELICITOUS. adj. [felix, Latin.] Happy.

FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitous.] Happily.

FELICITY. n. f. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, French.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease. Milt.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel? Rogers.

FE'LINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper. Grew.

FELL. adj. [felle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same.
Fairfax.

So fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,

To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakspeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakspeare.

I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tygers on the Lybian plain. Pope.
Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson.

FELL. n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide. Not used.

Wipe thine eye;
The gouters shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakspeare.

The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of air
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shakf.

To FELL. v. a. [fellen, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakf.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.
Daniel.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Howel.

On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled.
Milton.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.

Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him
down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryd.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryd.

3. To hew down; to cut down.

Then would he seem a farmer that would fell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell.
Hubbard's Tale.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their faulchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak.
Dryden.

FELL. The preterit of To fall.

None on their feet might stand, Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell

By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FE'LLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Isaiah.

FELLI'FLUOUS. adj. [fel and fluo, Lat.] Flowing with gall.

FE'LLMONGER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FE'LLNESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Q.

FELLOW. n. f. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.

Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n.
Shakspeare.

Axle-trees, naves, fellies and spokes were all molten. Kings.

FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow, Minshew; from fe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we comfort.

In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.

To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakspeare. Tempest.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabrick mounts the walls.
Dryden's Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.

A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants. Sidney.

Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now.
Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice;
the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows.
Addison's Spectator.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.
Shakspeare.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodorigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd. Shak.

I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks
he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakspeare.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark or likelihood. Shakspeare.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shak.

The Moors' abus'd by some most villainous
knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!
Shakspeare.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed.
Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal. Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man.
Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.

There should be a mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed. Bacon.

To FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakspeare.

FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. f. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes, in this lower world. Watts' Logick, Introduction.

FELLOW-HEIR. n. f. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The gentiles should be fellow-heirs. Eph.

FELLOW-HELPER. n. f. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth. 3 John.

FELLOW-LABOURER. n. f. One who labours in the same design.

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milton.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dames we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. Shakspeare.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Philippians.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pry'thee, do not mock me, fellow-student. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts' Logick.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve? Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.

FELLOW-FEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest; commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling. Arbutnot.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.]

FELLOWLY. } Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carew.

One feed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tusser.

FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.

This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shakspeare.

From blissful bow'rs

Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light Hasted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shaksp.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.
Most of the other christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load.

Milton's Paradise Regained.

O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And will not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a fail! Shak.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army.

Clarendon.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Corusodes having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that every man may have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss.

Cocker.

FELLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tyger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spenser.

FEL-DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that commits felony by murdering himself.FELON. n. f. [from felon, French; felo, low Latin; fel, Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shakspere.
The wily fox
Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murd'rous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow, a tumour formed between the bone and its invelling membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wifeman's Surgery.

FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!

What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirred up so mischievous despight! Spenser.
Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villanous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Wotton.

O thievish night!

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies. Dryd.

FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.FELONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked. Not used.

I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonous force of mine enemy. Spenser.

FELONY. n. f. [from felonie, French; felonia, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone.

Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other suns, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,
Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.

Add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.

If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen.

Dryden.

3. Female Rhymes. Double rhymes so called because, in French, from which the term is taken, they end in e weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.

Coroley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

of feminality take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown.

FEMININE. adj. [from femininus, Latin.]

1. Of the sex that brings young; female.

Thus we chastise the god of wine
With water that is feminine,
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and so concorporate. Cleaveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.

Her heav'nly form
Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton.

3. Effeminate; emasculated; wanting manliness.

Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether
feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacy.

Raleigh's History.

FEMININE. n. f. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? And not fill the world at once With men, as angels, without feminine? Milton.

FEMORAL. adj. [from femoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation.

Sharp's Surgery.

FEN. n. f. [from penn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.]

A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbots.

I go alone,

Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.

Shakspere's Coriolanus.

The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward.
He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,

And with a clear unsully'd current glides. Addis.

FENBERRY. n. f. [from fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. *Skinner.*FENCE. n. f. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath.

Addison's Cato.

2. Enclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Shall I mention make
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?

Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence?

Dryden.

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despight his nice fence and his active practice.
Shakspeare.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To enclose; to secure by an enclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers bestowed is their grain,
Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade.
Fairfax.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass,
and set darkness in my paths. Job.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac.
See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail or other inclosure. Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. To guard; to fortify.

So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent.
Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throstle sing, he falls straight a capering:
He will fence with his own shadow. Shakspeare.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;
The stooping warriors aiming head to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore.
Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without enclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive:
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from north, from south. Rowe.

FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick,
that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence.

Addison.

FENCINGMASTER. n. f. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.FENCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [fence and school.]

A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising.
Locke.

FEN-CRICKET. n. f. [grillotalpa.] An insect that digs itself holes in the ground.To FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold. Dryd.

To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FENDER. n. f. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERATION. n. f. [feneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superferation. Brown.

FENNEL. n. f. [feniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.

A sav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n.
Milton.

FENNELFLOWER. n. f. [nigella.] A plant.FENNELGIANT. n. f. [ferula.] A plant.FENNY. adj. [from fen.]

to invest with right.

FEOFFEE. n. f. [feoffatus, Latin; fieffé, French.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffees in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the escheat of his lands. Spenser.

FEOFFER. n. f. [feoffator, low Latin.]

One who gives possession of any thing]
See FEOFFMENT.

FEOFFMENT. n. f. [feoffamentum, Lat.]

The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immoveable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever,
by the delivery of seisin of the thing given:
when it is in writing, it is called a deed of feoff-ment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffer and a donor is, that the feoffer gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail. Corwell.

Fruitfulness; fertility. Diâ.

FERAL. adj. [feralis, Latin.] Funereal; deadly. *Diâ.*FERIATION. n. f. [feriatio, Latin.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriation in nature, this season is commonly termed the physicians vacation. Brown.

FERINE. adj. [ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts; as, lions, ty-

FERINENESS. n. f. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FERITY. n. f. [feritas, Latin.] Barba-ricity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason.
Woodward's Natural History.

To FERMENT. v. a. [fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.] To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vig'rous swains! while youth ferment your blood,

And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,
Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.
Pope.

To FERMENT. v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

FERMENT. n. f. [ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts females into a fever upon im-pregnation; and all animal humours which poison, are putrefying ferments. Floyer.

2. Intestine motion; tumult.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire. Rogers.

FERMENTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.FERMENTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation. Not used.

Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy ferocities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fer-mental faculty of the stomach. Brown.

FERMENTATION. n. f. [fermentatio, Latin.]

A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles:
as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together.

Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens.

Boyle.

A man by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before.

Collier of Friendship

The sap in fluent dance,

And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads

All this innumerable colour'd scene of things.

Thomson.

FERMENTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatical spirits destroy by their fermentative heat.

Arbuthnot.

FERN. n. f. [fearn, Saxon.] A plant.

The leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, dentated on the edges, and set close one by another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy decocted for the rickets in children.

Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,
Horrid with fern and intricate with thorn;
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn.

Dryden.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens.

Miller.

FERNY. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair

To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lare.

FEROCIOUS. adj. [ferox, Latin; feroce, French.]

1. Savage; fierce.

Smedley rose in majesty of mud;
Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with ooze.

Pope.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfetation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FEROCITY. n. f. [ferocitas, Latin; ferocité, French; from ferocious.] Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable flatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion.

Addison's Guardian.

Untaught, uncultivated, as they were Inhospitable, full of ferocity.

Philips' Briton.

FERREOUS. adj. [ferreus, Latin.] Irony; partaking of iron.

In the body of glass there is no ferreous or magnetical nature.

Brown's Vulg. Errors.

They are cold, hot, purgative, diuretick, ferruginous, saline, petrefying, and bituminous.

Ray.

FERRULE. n. f. [from ferrum, iron, Lat.]

An iron ring put round any thing to keep it from cracking.

The fingers ends are strengthened with nails, as we fortify the ends of our staves or forks with iron hoops or ferrules.

Ray.

To FERRY. v. a. [feapan, to pass, Sax.

fabr, German, a passage. Skinner imagines that this whole family of words may be deduced from the Latin veho.

I do not love Latin originals; but if such must be fought, may not these words be more naturally derived from ferri, to be carried? To carry over in a boat.

Cymocles heard and saw,

He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,

The little bark unto the shore to draw,

And him to ferry over that deep ford.

F. Queen.

To FERRY. v. n. To pass over water in a vessel of carriage.

Thence hurried back to fire,

They ferry over this Lethæan found

Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment.

Milton.

FERRY. } n. f. [from the verb, and
FERRYBOAT. } boat.]

1. A vessel of carriage; a vessel in which goods or passengers are carried over water.

By this time was the worthy Guyon brought

Unto the other side of that wide strand,

Where she was rowing, and for passage sought:

Him needed not long call, she soon to hand

Her ferry brought.

Fairy Queen.

Bring them with imagin'd speed

Unto the Traject, to the common ferry

Which trades to Venice.

A ferryboat to carry over the king's household.

2 Samuel.

I went down to the river Brent in the ordinary ferry.

Addison.

2. The passage over which the ferry boat passes.

FERRYMAN. n. f. [ferry and man.] One who keeps a ferry; one who for hire transports goods and passengers over the water.

I past, methought, the melancholy flood,

With that grim ferryman which poets write of,

Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The common ferryman of Egypt, that waded over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him.

Brown.

The grisly ferryman of hell deny'd

Æneas entrance, 'till he knew his guide.

Rosc.

FERTH or Forth. Common terminations are the same as in English an army; coming from the Saxon word fyrð.

Gibson.

FERTILE. adj. [fertile, French; fertilis, Latin.]

1. Fruitful; abundant; plenteous.

I had hope of France,

As firmly as I hope for fertile England.

Shaksp.

I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field; so fertile, that it has given me two harvests in a summer.

Dryden.

I ask whether in the uncultivated waste of America, a thousand acres yield as many conveniences of life as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire?

Locke.

View the wide earth adorn'd with hills and woods,

Rich in her herds, and fertile by her floods.

Blackmore.

2. With of before the thing produced.

The earth is fertile of all kind of grain.

Camden's Remains.

This happy country is extremely fertile, as of those above, so likewise of its productions under ground.

Woodward.

FERTILENESS. n. f. [from fertile.] Fruitfulness; fecundity.

To FERTILIZE. v. a. [from fertile.]

To fecundate; to fertilize; to make fruitful or productive. Not in use.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole racemation or cluster of eggs not excluded in many weeks after.

Brown.

FERTILITY. n. f. [fertilitas, Latin.] Fecundity; abundance; fruitfulness; plenteousness.

I will go root away

The noisome weeds, that without profit suck

The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

Paradise itself exceeded in beauty and fertility; and these places had but a resemblance thereof.

Raleigh's History.

The quickness of the imagination is seen in the invention, the fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression.

Dryden.

To inundations Egypt, through which the Nile flows, and the Indies owe their extraordinary fertility, and those mighty crops they produce after these waters are withdrawn.

Woodward.

To FERTILIZE. v. a. [fertiliser, French.]

To make fruitful; to make plenteous; to make productive; to fecundate.

Rain-water carries along with it a sort of terrestrial matter that fertilizes the land, as being proper for the formation of vegetables.

Woodward's Natural History.

FERTILY. adv. [from fertile.] Fruitfully; plenteously; plentifully; abundantly.

Your diver

Did hang a fish on his hook, which he

With fervency drew up.

Shakspeare.

2. Pious ardour; flame of devotion; zeal.

We have on all sides lost most of our first fervency towards God.

Hooker, Dedication.

There must be zeal and fervency in him which proposeth for the rest those suits and supplications, which they by their joyful acclamations must ratify.

Hooker.

When you pray, let it be with attention, with fervency and with perseverance.

Wake.

FERVENT. adj. [fervens, Latin; fervent, French.]

1. Hot; boiling.

The fountains

Bubbling wave did ever freshly wade

Ne ever would through fervent summer fade.

Spenser.

From the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity.

Watson.

2. Hot in temper; vehement.

They that are more fervent to dispute, be not always the most able to determine.

Hooker.

3. Ardent in piety; warm in zeal; flaming with devotion.

This man being fervent in the spirit, taught diligently the things of the Lord. Acts.
 So spake the fervent angel; but his zeal
 None seconded, as out of season judg'd,
 Or singular and rash. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Let all enquiries into the mysterious points of theology be carried on with fervent petitions to God, that he would dispose their minds to direct all their skill to the promotion of a good life.
South.

FERVENTLY. adv. [from fervent.]

1. Eagerly; vehemently.

They all that charge did fervently apply;
 With greedy malice and importune toil.

Fairy Queen.

2. With pious ardour; with holy zeal.

Epaphras saluteth you, labouring fervently for you in prayers. Colossians.

He cares not how or what he suffers, so he suffer well, and be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he suffers, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor.

FERVID. adj. [fervidus, Latin.]

1. Hot; burning; boiling.

2. Vehement; eager; zealous.

1. Heat.

2. Zeal; passion; ardour.

Diſt.

FERVIDNESS. n. f. [from fervid.] Ardour
 of mind; zeal; passion.

As to the healing of Malchus's ear, in the account of the meek Lamb of God, it was a kind of injury done to him by the fervidness of St.
 Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of.
Bentley.

FERULA. n. f. [ferule, French; from ferula, giant fennel, Latin.] An instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand: so named because anciently the stalks of fennel were used for this purpose.

These differ as much as the rod and ferula.

Shaw's Grammar.

TO FERULE. v. a. To chastise with the ferula.

FERVOUR. n. f. [fervor, Latin; ferveur, French.]

1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual ferveur proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown.

Like bright Aurora, whose refulgent ray
 Foretells the ferveur of ensuing day,
 And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
 To leafy shadows, from the threaten'd heat.

Waller.

These silver drops, like morning dew,
 Foretell the ferveur of the day;
 So from one cloud soft show'rs we view,
 And blasting lightnings burst away.

Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in ferveur of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker.

Haply despair hath seiz'd her;
 Or, wing'd with ferveur of her love, she's flown
 To her desir'd Posthumus. Shakspeare's Cymb.

3. Ardour of piety.

There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present ferveur.

Addison on Italy.

FE'SCUE. n. f. [veefse, Dutch; festu, Fr.]

A small wire by which those who teach to read point out the letters.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the fore-finger of the right hand, or by any kind of fescue. Holder.

Teach them how manly passions ought to move;
 For such as cannot think, can never love;
 And since they needs will judge the poet's art,
 Point 'em with fescues to each shining part.

Dryden.

FE'SELS. n. f. A kind of base grain.

Disdain not fesels or poor vetch to sow,
 Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive.

May's Virgil.

FESSE. n. f. [In heraldry.]

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the es-cutcheon over the middle: if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say bar-wife, or barry of six, eight, or ten; as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules, barry of eight. Peacham.

TO FE'STER. v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, Junius.] To rankle;
 to corrupt; to grow virulent.

I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the fore which had deeply festered within me.

Sidney.

Inward corruption and infected sin,
 Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
 And festering sore did rankle yet within. F. Queen.

How should our festered sores be cured? Hooker.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart,
 To hear themselves remem'ber'd.

—Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
 And tent themselves with death. Shakspeare.

Mind that their souls

May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
 From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies

Must lie and fester. Shakspeare's Henry v.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Wotton.

Passion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester. South.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinatus, Latin.]

Hasty; hurried. Not in use.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Shakspeare's King Lear.

FESTINATELY. adv. [from festinate.]

Hastily; speedily; with speed. Not in use.

Take this key; give enlargement to the swain,
 and bring him festinately hither. Shakspeare.

FESTINATION. n. f. [festinatio, Latin.]

Haste; hurry.

FESTIVAL. adj. [festivus, Lat.] Pertaining to feasts; joyous.

He appeared at great tables, and festival entertainments, that he might manifest his divine charity to men. Atterbury.

FESTIVAL. n. f. Time of feast; anniversary day, of civil or religious joy.

So tedious is this day,
 As is the night before some festival,
 To an impatient child that hath new robes,
 And may not wear them. Shakspeare.

Th' invited sisters with their graces blest
 Their festivals. Sandys.

The morning trumpets festival proclaim'd
 Through each high street. Milton's Agor. 9es.

Follow, ye nymphs and shepherds all,
 Come celebrate this festival,
 And merrily sing and sport and play;
 'Tis Oriana's nuptial day. Granville.

By sacrifice of the tongues they purged away whatever they had spoken amiss during the festival.
Broome on the Odyssey.

The festival of our Lord's resurrection we have celebrated, and may now consider the chief consequence of his resurrection a judgment to come.
Atterbury's Sermons.

FE'STIVE. adj. [festivus, Latin.] Joyous; gay; befitting a feast.

The glad circle round them yield their souls
 To festive mirth and wit that knows no gall.
Thomson.

FESTIVITY. n. f. [festivitas, Latin; from festive.]

1. Festival; time of rejoicing.

The daughter of Jephtha came to be worshipped as a deity, and had an annual festivity observed unto her honour. Brown.

There happening a great and solemn festivity, such as the sheep-shearings used to be, David condescends to beg of a rich man some small repast.
South.

2. Gayety; joyfulness; temper or behaviour befitting a feast.

To some persons there is no better instrument to cause the remembrance, and to endear the affection to the article, than the recommending it by festivity and joy of a holy-day. Taylor.

FESTOON. n. f. [feston, French.] An ornament of carved work in the form of a wreath or garland of flowers, or leaves twisted together, thickest at the middle,
 and suspended by the two extremes,
 whence it hangs down perpendicularly.
Harris.

FE'STUCINE. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Strawcolour between green and yellow.

Therein may be discovered a little insect of a festucine or pale green, resembling a locust or grasshopper. Brown.

FESTUCOUS. adj. [festuca, Lat.] Formed of straw.

We speak of straws, or festucous divisions, lightly drawn over with oil. Brown.

TO FET. v. a. To fetch; to go and bring. Not in use.

Get home with thy fewel, make ready to fet,
 The sooner the easier carriage to get. Tusser.

But for he was unable them to fet,
 A little boy did on him still attend. F. Queen.

And they fet forth Urijah out of Egypt to Jehoiakim, who slew him with the sword. Jer.

FET. n. f. [I suppose from sait, French,
 a part or portion.] A piece. Not in use.

The bottom clear

Now laid with many a fet
 Of seed-pearl, e'er she bath'd her there
 Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

TO FETCH. v. a. preter. fetched; anciently fet, unless it rather came from To fet. [peccan, pettan, Saxon.]

1. To go and bring.

They have devis'd a mean
 How he her chamber-window will ascend,
 And with a corded ladder fetch her down. Shak.

We will take men to fetch victuals for the people. Judges.

Go to the flock, and fetch me from thence two kid goats. Genesis.

The seat of empire where the Irish come,
 And the unwilling Scotch, to fetch their doom.
Waller.

 Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. To derive; to draw.

On you noblest English,
 Whose blood is fetch'd from fathers of war-proof.
Shakspeare.

3. To strike at a distance.

The conditions of weapons, and their improvements, are the fetching afar off; for that outruns the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets.
Bacon's Essays.

4. To bring to any state by some powerful operation.

In smells we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon. Bacon.

At Rome any of those arts immediately thrives, under the encouragement of the prince, and may be fetch'd up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison on Italy.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.

General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sanderfon.

6. To produce by some kind of force.

These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself by. Milton on Education.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties 'till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours. Addison's Spectator.

7. To perform: it is applied to motion or cause.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king Hath charg'd you should not speak together. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round Over the mount. Milton.

To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest. Knolles' History.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.

Note a wild and wanton herd, Or race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shakspeare.

The fox fetch'd a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes. L'Estrange.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small pox, she fetches a deep sigh. Addison.

9. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.

Mean time flew our ships, and straight we fetch'd

The tyrens isle; a spleenless wind so stretcht Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel. Chapman.

If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day Travelling east; and with her part averle From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Par. Lost.

The hare laid himself down, and took a nap; for, says he, I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

10. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion. Locke.

To FETCH. v. n. To move with a quick return.

Like a shifted wind unto a sail, It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about. Shakspeare.

FETCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed, or by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find, His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind: His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can; His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then. Tupper.

It is a fetch of wit; You laying these slight follies on my son, As 'twere a thing a little foil'd i' th' working. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks As rota men of politics, Vol. I.

Strelght cast about to over-reach

Th' unwary conqu'ror with a fetch. Hudibras

With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Stillingsfleet.

The fox had a fetch in't. L'Estrange.

From these instances and fetches

Thou mak'st of horses, clocks, and watches;

Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean

That Alma is a mere machine. Prior.

FETCHER. n. f. [from to fetch.] One that fetches any thing.

FETID. adj. [fetidus, Latin; fetid, Fr.]

Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy. Bacon.

In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot eruptions. Arbuthnot.

Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine, Defends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods, From stifled Cairo's filth and fetid fields. Thomson's Summer.

FETIDNESS. n. f. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

FETLOCK. n. f. [feet and lock.] A tuft of hair that grows behind the paster joint of many horses: horses of a low size have scarce any such tuft. Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shakspeare's Henry v.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before, And on his front a snowy star he bore. Dryden.

FETOR. n. f. [fator, Latin.] A stink; a stench; a strong and offensive smell.

The fetor may discover itself by sweat and humour. Brown.

When the symptoms are attended with a fetor of any kind, such a disease will be cured by accecent substances, and none better than whey. Arbuthnot on Diet.

FETTER. n. f. It is commonly used in the plural fetters. [from feet; pettere, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet; and like manacles on the right hand. Eccles.

Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been tied, I have by other men's errors failed. Raleigh.

Passions too fierce to be in fetters bound, And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

The wretch in double fetters bound, Your potent mercy may release. Prior.

Pleasure arose in those very parts of his leg that just before had been so much pained by the fetter. Addison.

I thought her pride Had broke your fetters, and assur'd your freedom. A. Phillips.

TO FETTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to shackle; to tie. It is properly used of the feet, but is applied to other restraints.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness. Sidney.

My conscience! thou art fetter'd More than my shanks and wrists. Shakspeare.

Fetter strong madness in a filken thread; Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakspeare.

Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move? Bramhall.

A chain which man to fetter man has made; *By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd. Prior.

TO FETTER. v. n. [A cant word from feel.] To do trifling business; to ply the hands without labour.

When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rung the bell. Swift's Directions to the Footman.

FE'TUS. n. f. [fetus, Latin.] Any animal in embrio; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

That paradox of Hippocrates some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respire in the womb. Boyle.

FEUD. n. f. [feahd, enmity, Saxon.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds In sharing of their publick goods. Hudibras.

In former ages it was a policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain. Addison.

Scythia mourns Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome. Addison's Cato.

FEUDAL. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

FEUDAL. n. f. A dependance; something held by tenure; a fee; a feu.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England. Hale.

FEUDATORY. n. f. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.

The duke of Parma was tempted to be true to that enterprize, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the feignory in chief of the pope, and the protection of Spain. Bacon.

FEVER. n. f. [fièvre, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending? Shakspeare's Henry v.

Duncan is in his grave; After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shakspeare.

Should not a lingering fever be remov'd, Because it long has rag'd within my blood? Dryden.

He had never dreamed in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of. Locke.

TO FE'VER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The whitehand of a lady fever thee! Shake to look on't. Shakspeare's Ant. and Cleop.

Her blood all fever'd, and with a furious leap, She sprung from bed distracted in her mind. Dryden.

FE'VERET. n. f. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance. Ayliffe.

FE'VERFEW. n. f. [febris and fugo, Lat.] A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England. Miller.

FE'VERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire, And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We tofs and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryden.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish north retire. Dryd.

FE'VERISHNESS, n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

FE'VEROUS, adj. [fièvreux-se, French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakspeare.

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that Southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not. Bacon's Natural History.

FE'VERY, adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

FEUILLAGE, n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval. Jervas to Pope.

FEUILLEMORT, n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot.

FE'UTERER, n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW, adj. [feo, peopa, Sax. fua, Dan.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many. Jeremiah.

So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;

For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryd.

On winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryd.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.
Hooker.

So having said, he thus to Eve in few :
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done?
Milton.

Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryd.

The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.

FE'WEL, n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fevel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions and broils?

Hooker, Dedication.

Others may give the fevel or the fire!

But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.

A known quantity of fevel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it.

Bentley's Sermons.

To FE'WEL, v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fevel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fevels the infernal flame. Corwley.

FE'WNESS, n. f. [from few.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number.

These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied. Dryden.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.

Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakspeare.

To FEY, v. a. [vegben, Dutch.] To cleanse

a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry summer no water will yield,
By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tusser.

FIB, n. f. [A cant word among children.]

A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.

I so often lie,
Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I.
Pope.

To FIB, v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbutnot.

FI'BBER, n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.

FI'BRE, n. f. [fibre, French; fibra, Lat.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fibre, in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastick; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring,

as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived;

and others so big as to be plainly seen;

and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves,

veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,

Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still. Dryden.

FI'BRIL, n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells.

Chayne's Phil. Princ.

FI'BROUS, adj. [fibreux, French; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture.

Bacon's Natural History.

I saw Petreus' arms employed around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;

This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryd.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbutnot.

FIBULA, n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg;

and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FICKLE, adj. [ficol, Saxon.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; change-ful; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,
In France amongst a fickle wavering nation.

Shakspeare's Henry vi.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.

They know how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;

For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.
Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

He would be loth
Us to abolish; left the adversary

Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
Most favours! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FICKLENESS, n. f. [from fickle.] Incon-stancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Bacchus of whom she complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame.
Fairy Queen.

I am a soldier and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakspeare.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences.

Addison's Frecholder.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell,
I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Addison.

FICKLY, adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,
Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes

Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held

By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FICO, n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig
for you.

Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fico to his adversaries. Carew.

FI'CTILE, adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Natural History.

FI'CTION, n. f. [fictio, Latin; *fis*ion, Fr.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.

If the presence of God in the image, by a mere *fis*ion of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it?

Stillington.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she lives in afflictions.
Sidney.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples Kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah.
Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lie.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fiſtus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.

With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
Matter and motion man restrains,
And studied lines and fictitious circles draws.
Prior.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fiſtitius, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly so,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame.
Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty.
Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prosopœia.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory.
Addison.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FID. n. f. [fiſta, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords.
Skinner.

FIDDLE. n. f. [fiſele, Saxon; vedel, Dutch; fideli, German; fidicula, Latin; fiſſil, Erſe.] A stringed instrument of musick; a violin.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer.
Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle,
Is sung; but breaks off in the middle.
Hudibras.
She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not,
for her heart, find whereabout the tune lay.
Addison's Guardian.

To FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city.
Bacon's Essays.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance.
Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together.
Arbuthnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call
fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done.
Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.] Trifles.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature.
Spectator.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her.
Arbuthnot.

FIDDLER. n. f. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no saucy fiddler presume to intrude,
Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss.
B. Jonſon.

Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was.
Taylor.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jests,
To be repeated like John Dory,
When fiddlers sing at feasts.
Dryden.

When mis's delights in her spinner,
A fiddler may a fortune get.
Swift.

FIDDLESTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,
With which he strung his fiddlestick.
Hudibras.

FIDDLESTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth.
Arbuthnot.

FIDELITY. n. f. [ſidelitas, Latin; ſidelité, French.]

1. Honesty; veracity.

The church, by her publick reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fidelity.
Hooker.

2. Faithful adherence.

They mistake credulity for fidelity.
Clarke

To FIDGE. } v. n. [A cant word.] To
To FIDGE. } move nimbly and irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble;
You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
Put all your brother puppets out.
Swift.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands.
Hammond's Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarius, Latin.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary,
that faith is the only instrument of his justification:
and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it.
Hammond.

FIDUCIARY. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the gospel has revealed.
Wake.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience.
Howel.

FIEF. n. f. [ſief, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.

To the next realm she stretch'd her sway,
For painture near adjoining lay,
A plenteous province and alluring prey;
A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,
And the whole fief, in right of poetry, she claim'd.
Dryden.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

FIELD. n. f. [felb, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited; not built on.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove,
That hills and vallies, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield.
Raleigh.

By the civil law the corpse of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields.
Ayliffe.

2. Ground not enclosed.

Field lands are not exempted from mildew, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in inclosed lands.
Mortimer.

Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain
In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain.
Pope.

4. The open country: opposed to house or quarters.

Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed.
Shakspeare.

5. The ground of battle.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy, than secures him from it.
Locke.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals.
Shakspeare.

What though the field be lost,
All is not lost.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;
Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.
Dryden.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove.
Pope.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill-natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature.
Addison's Spectator.

I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace.
Smalridge.

Who can this field of miracles survey,
And not with Galen all in rapture say,
Behold a God, adore him and obey.
Blackmore.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour.
Dryden.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

FIELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in batants.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak.

Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war.

Shakspeare.

The common question is, if we must now surrender Spain, what have we been fighting for all this while? the answer is ready: we have been fighting for the ruin of the publick interest, and the advancement of a private.

Swift.

For her confederate nations fought, and kings were slain,

Troy was o'erthrown, and a whole empire fell.

Philips.

2. To combat; to duel; to contend in single fight.

One shall undertake to fight against another.

2 Esdras.

The poor wren,

The most diminutive of birds, will fight,

The young ones in her nest, against the owl.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

3. To act as a soldier in any case.

Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,

And fought the holy wars in Palestine,

By this brave duke came early to his grave.

To fight the Phrygian and th' Ausonian hosts.

Dryden's Aeneid.

FIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Battle.

Gabriel, lead forth to battle these my sons

Invincible, lead forth my armed faints,

By thousands and by millions rang'd for fight.

Milton.

2. Combat; duel.

Herilus in single fight I slew,

Whom with three lives Feronia did endue;

And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,

'Till the last ebbing soul return'd no more.

Dryden's Aeneid.

3. Something to screen the combatants in ships.

Who ever saw a noble fight,

That never view'd a brave sea-fight!

Hang up your bloody colours in the air,

Up with your fights and your nettings prepare.

Dryden.

FIGHTER. n. f. [from fight.] Warriour;
duellist.

I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter.

Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter!

Dryden.

FIGHTING. participial adj. [from fight.]

1. Qualified for war; fit for battle.

An host of fighting men went out to war by hands.

2 Chronicles.

2. Occupied by war; being the scene of war.

In fighting fields as far the spear I throw
As flies the arrow from the well-drawn bow.

Pope.

FIGMA'RIGOLD. n. f. A plant. It is succulent, and has the appearance of houseleek: the leaves grow opposite by pairs.

Miller.

FIGMENT. n. f. [figmentum, Latin.] An invention; a fiction; the idea feigned.

Upon the like grounds was raised the figment of Briareus, who, dwelling in a city called Hecatonchiria, the fancies of those times assigned him an hundred hands.

Brown.

Those assertions are in truth the figments of those idle brains that brought romances into church history.

Bishop Lloyd.

It carried rather an appearance of figment and invention, in those that handed down the memory of it, than of truth and reality.

Woodward.

FIGPECKER. n. f. [fig and peck; ficcedula, Latin.] A bird.

FIGULATE. adj. [from figulus, Lat.] Made of potters clay.

FIGURABLE. adj. [from figuro, Lat.]
Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.

The differences of impressible and not impres-sible, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions.

Bacon.

FIGURABILITY. n. f. [from figurable.]
The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.

FIGURAL. adj. [from figure.]

1. Represented by delineation.

Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions.

Brown.

2. FIGURAL Number. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid.

Harris.

FIGURATE. adj. [figuratus, Latin.]

1. Of a certain and determinate form.

Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined.

Bacon.

2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.

3. FIGURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.]
That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.

4. FIGURATE Descant. [In musick.]
That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as con-cords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.

FIGURA'TION. n. f. [figuratus, Latin.]

1. Determination to a certain form.

Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The act of giving a certain form.

If motion be in a certain order, there fol-loweth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect.

Bacon's Natural History.

FIGURATIVE. adj. [figuratif-ve, French, from figura, Latin.]

1. Representing something else; typical; representative.

This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; whereinto Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease.

Hooker.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning; not literal.

How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason.

Stillingsfleet.

This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they fignify in their first ordinary intention.

Rogers.

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical ex-ornations; full of changes from the original sense.

Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions.

Dryden's Juv. Pref.

FIGURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.]

By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others.

Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uziah and Ezechias.

Brown.

Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglajs, which have four leaves.

Bacon.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases.

Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies;
for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued.

Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion.

Shakspeare.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth.

Dryden.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his

Addison's Spectator.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either.
Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryd.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow.
Addison's Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocence. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seemed at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the finews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryd.

My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts' Logic.

9. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot

Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Antony. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: the works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubry beyond our element. Shakspere.

He set a figure to discover
If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.

Figure-flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come.
Romans.

12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.
Shakspere.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stilling fleet.

They have been taught rhetoric, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [from figuro, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween.
Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd world now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shaksp.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shaksp.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shaksp.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryden.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare.
Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
In this the heaven figures some event. Shaksp.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As thro' a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen.
Dryden.

A pretender to astrology and prediction. Quacks, figure-flingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier of Confidence.

FIGWORT. n. s. [fig and wort; ficaria.]

FILA'CEOUS. adj. [from filum, Latin.]

Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Natural History.

FILACER. n. s. [filazarius, low Lat.]

filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. s. [filament, French;

filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Broom.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air;
And those still strike the next, 'till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light.
Blackmore.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbuth.

FILBERT. n. s. [This is derived by Ju- nius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon's Essays.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone.
Dorset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word

filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbeth by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by day. Tusser.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakspeare.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras.

The pifunire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods.

Fain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey. Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay.

FILCHER. n. f. [from filch.] A thief;
a petty robber.

FILE. n. f. [file, French; filum, a thread,
Latin.]

1. A thread. Not used.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those,
and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present musters grow upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice.

The valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Upon a tawny front. Shakspeare.

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. [peol, Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging:

the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made: and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Files in their hands, and hammers at their side.

Dryden.

FILECUTTER. n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

TO FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire.

Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. [from peolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filings or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. To smooth; to polish.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory,
his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious. Shaksp.

4. [from filan, Saxon.] To foul; to sully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd.

His weeds divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman's Illiad.

TO FILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and filed off. Tatler.

Did all the grosser atoms at the cell
Of chance file off to form the pondrous ball,
And undetermin'd into order fall? Blackmore.

FILÉMOT. n. f. [corrupted from feuille
morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filémot, turned up with red. Swift.

FILER. n. f. [from file.] One who files;
one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius,
Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answ'ring spoke.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise.

FILIA'TION. n. f. [from filius, Latin.]
The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale.

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Classics.

TO FILL. v. a. [pyllan, Saxon.]

1. To store till no more can be admitted.

Fill the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim.

I am who fill
Infinitude, nor vacuous space. Milton.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of heav'n and earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill.

3. To satisfy; to content.

He with his comforted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milton.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness fits so loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the under-work of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

TO FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.

In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double.

We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation;
and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization.

FILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That eye thereof her babes may suck their fill.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esdras.

Mean while enjoy
Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton.

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill,
I spar'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That so you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham's Sophy.
Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction.
Pope.

2. [more properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer.

FILLER. n. f. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer.

FILLET. n. f. [filet, French; filum, Latin.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs.
Dryden's Æneid.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakspeare.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel.

Pillars and their fillets of silver. Exodus.

To FILLER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.
2. To adorn with an astragal.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters, and filleted them. Exodus.

To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun.
Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

We see, that if you fillip a lute string, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FILLY. n. f. [filoy, Welsh; fille, French.]

1. A young horse or mare. Not now used.

Geld fillies, but tits, yet a nine days of age,
They die else of gelding, and gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone.
Tusser.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare: opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakspeare.

I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.

FILM. n. f. [filmēpa, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly.
Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
When light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtrō, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.
2. To strain; to percolate.

Dilute this liquor with fair water, filtre it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew.

FILTER. n. f. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it.
2. A strainer; a searce.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FILTH. n. f. [filð, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths favour but themselves. Shakspeare.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Nat. History.

How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It stuck filthily in camel's stomach that built, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakspeare.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dunciad.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtrare.]

To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbutnot.

FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Bogel.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. f. [corrupted from female.]

The light summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called finble hemp. Murkin.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,

In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, and serve at a need,
The finble to spin, and the carle for her seed. Taylor.

FIN. n. f. [fin, Saxon; win, Dutch.]

The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakspeare.

Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Alva.

Thus at half-ebb a rilling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watery herd, affrighted at the roar,

Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way.
Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin.
Addison.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet.
Brown.

FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable.
Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable.
Hayward.

FINAL. adj. [final, French; finalis, Latin.]

1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invoc'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope.
Milton.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war.
Bacon.

Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland.
Davies.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them.
Hooker.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity.
Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient.
Collier.

FINAL LY. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight bereav'd
May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown.
Milton.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only.
Davies on Ireland.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's fins to answer for but their own.
South.

FINANCE. n. f. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased.
Bacon.
The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the escheats and forfeitures.

When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing.
Luke.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both.
Shakspeare.

3. To obtain something desired.

Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom used Permissive, and acceptance found.
Milton.

Our voluntary service he requires,
Not our necessitated; such with him
Finds no acceptance, nor can find.
Milton.

4. To meet with; to fall upon.

There watchful at the gate they find
Suspicion with her eyes behind.
Dodſley.
In woods and forests thou art found.
Cowley.
The bad must miss, the good unsought shall find.
Pope.

5. To know by experience.

How oft will he
Of thy chang'd faith complain!
And his fortunes find to be
So airy and so vain!
Cowley.
The torrid zone is now found habitable.
Cowley.

6. To come to; to attain.

The sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth; there first receiv'd
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find.
Milton.

7. To discover by study, or attention.

The fox that first this cause of grief did find,
'Gan first thus plain his case with words unkind.

'Tis but because there was no wind.
Cowley.

10. To gain by any mental endeavour.

I by conversing cannot these erect
From prone, nor in their ways complacence find.
Milton.

If we for happiness could leisure find,
And wand'ring time into a method bind,
We should not then the great mens favour need.
Cowley.

We oft review, each finding like a friend
Something to blame, and something to commend.
Pope.

11. To remark; to observe; to perceive.

Thus far to try thee, Adam, I was pleas'd,
And find thee knowing not of beast alone,
Which thou hast rightly nam'd, but of thyself.
Milton.

Beauty of wit in all I find.
Cowley.

12. To detect; to deprehend; to catch.

When first found in a lie, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it.
Lacke.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. 2 Corinthians.

2. To make perfect.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Broom on the Odyssey.

3. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;
It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finish'd as my last work ought to be; that is, more finish'd than the rest. Pope.

4. To end; to put an end to.

FINISHER. n. f. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. Shaksp.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.
O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FINITE. adj. [finitus Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration, will by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley.

FINITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FINITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finutely distant from us. Stillingsfleet.

FINITENESS. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FINITUDE. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries. This is hardly an authorized word.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Gheyn.

FINLESS. adj. [from fin.] Wanting fins.

He angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakspeare.

FINLIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian on the stream did glide;
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn
Or finlike oars did spread from either side. Dryd.

FINNED. adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plough up the turf with a broad finned plough. Mortimer.

FINNY. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins; formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,
His azure car and finny couriers guides;
Proteus his name. Dryden's Virgil.

New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share;

New colonies of birds to people air;
And to their oozy beds the finny fish repair. Dryden's Ovid.

While black with storms the ruffled ocean rolls,
And from the fisher's art defends her finny shoals. Blackmore.

With hairy springes we the birds betray;
Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

FINTOED. adj. [fin and toe.] Palmipedous; having a membrane between the toes.

Such creatures as are whole footed, or fintoed, viz. some birds and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there. Ray.

FI'NOCHIO. n. f. A species of fennel.

FIPPLE. n. f. [from fibula, Latin.] A stopper.

You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fipple that straitneth the air much more than the simple concave, would yield no sound. Bacon's Natural History.

FIR. n. f. [fyr, Welsh; funh, Saxon; fyr, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is ever green: the leaves are single, and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are squamose. Miller.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir, 1 Kings.

The spiring fir and stately box. Pope.

FIRE. n. f. [fȳn, Saxon; seur, German.]

1. The igneous element.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky;
Then air succeeds, in lightness next to fire. Dryden.

2. Any thing burning.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

Where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Shakspeare.

So contraries on Ætna's top conspire;
Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire. Cowley.

3. A conflagration of towns or countries.

There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire. Arbutnot.
Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,
Conceal'd in chests from human eyes,
A fire may come, and it may be Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee. Granville.

4. Flame; light; lustre.

Stars hide your fires!
Let not night see my black and deep desires. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

5. Torture by burning.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire,
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire? Prior.

6. The punishment of the damned.

Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire?
Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isaiah.

7. Any thing provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Shakspeare.

8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.

He had fire in his temper, and a German bluntness; and, upon provocations, might strain a phrase. Atterbury.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

Nor can the snow that age does shed
Upon thy rev'rend head,
Quench or allay the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art. Cowley.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them. Felton on the Classics.

He brings, to make us from our ground retire,
The reasoner's weapons and the poet's fire. Blackmore.

Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire, Taught us that France had something to admire. Pope.

The bold Longinus all the nine inspire,
And warm the critick with a poet's fire. Pope.

Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire. Pope.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns. Shadwell.

The god of love retires;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires. Pope.
New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire. Moore's Fables.

11. Eruption or imposthumation: as, St. Anthony's fire.

12. To set FIRE on, or set on FIRE. To kindle; to inflame.

Hermosilla courageously set upon the horsemen, and set fire also upon the stables where the Turks horses stood. Knolles.

He that set a fire on a plane-tree to spite his neighbour, and the plane-tree set fire on his neighbour's house, is bound to pay all the loss, because it did all arise from his own ill intention. Taylor.

13. To set a FIRE. To inflame.

So inflam'd by my desire,
It may set her heart a-fire. Carew.

TO FIRE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on fire; to kindle.

They spoiled many parts of the city, and fired the houses of those whom they esteemed not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appeased by the fall of a sudden shower of rain. Hayward.

The breathless body, thus bewail'd, they lay,
And fire the pile. Dryden.

A second Paris, diff'ring but in name,
Shall fire his country with a second flame. Dryden's Æn.

2. To inflame the passions; to animate.

Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of pow'r,
A beauteous princely with a crown in dow'r,
So fire your mind, in arms assert your right. Dryden.

3. To drive by fire.

He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heav'n
And fire us hence. Shakspeare's King Lear.

TO FIRE. v. n.

What art thou asking of them, after all? Only to sit quietly at thy own fireside.

Arbutnot.

FIRESTICK. n. f. [fire and stick.] A lighted stick or brand.

Children when they play with firesticks, move and whirle them round so fast, that the motion will cozen their eyes, and represent an intire circle of fire to them.

Digby on Bodies.

FIRESTONE. n. f. [fire and stone.]

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions to the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our claypits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished.

Hill's Math. Med.

Firestone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

FIREWOOD. n. f. [fire and wood.] Wood to burn; fuel.

FISH. n. f. [fisc, Saxon; visch, Dutch.]

1. An animal that inhabits the water. Fish is used collectively for the race of fishes.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males subjects. Shakspeare.

And now the fish ignoble fates escape,
Since Venus ow'd her safety to their shape.
Creech.

There are fishes, that have wings, that are not strangers to the airy region: and there are some birds that are inhabitants of the water, whose blood is as cold as fishes; and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days. Locke.

2. The flesh of fish, opposed to that of terrestrial animals, by way of eminence called flesh.

I fight when I cannot chuse, and I eat no fish.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

We mortify ourselves with the diet of fish, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from the flesh of other animals. Brown.

TO FISH. v. n.

1. To be employed in catching fishes.

While others fish, with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth, catch mere simplicity. Shak.

TO FISH. v. a. To search water in quest of fish, or any thing else.

Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

Oft, as he fish'd her nether realms for wit,
The goddess favour'd him, and favours yet.
Pope's Dunciad.

FISH-HOOK. n. f. [fish and hook.] A hook to catch fishes.

A sharp point, bended upward and backward,
like a fish-hook. Grew's Museum.

FISH-POND. n. f. [fish and pond.] A small pool for fish.

Fish-ponds are no small improvement of watry boggy lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Fish-ponds were made where former forests
grew,
And hills were levell'd to extend the view.
Prior.

After the great value the Romans put upon fishes, it will not appear incredible that C. Hirrius should sell his fish-ponds for quadrages
H. S. 32, 291 l. 13 s. 4 d. Arbuthnot.

FISHER. n. f. [from fish.] One who is employed in catching fish.

In our fight the three were taken up,
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought:

At length another seiz'd on us,
And would have rest the fishers of their prey,
Had not they been very slow of sail. Shakspeare.

We know that town is but with fishers fraught,
Where Theseus govern'd and where Plato taught.
Sandys.

Left he should suspect it, draw it from him,
As fishers do the bait, to make him follow it.
Denham.

A soldier now he with his coat appears;
A fisher now, his trembling angle bears. Pope.

FISHERBOAT. n. f. [fisher and boat.] A boat employed in catching fish.

FISHERMAN. n. f. [fisher and man.]

One whose employment and livelihood is to catch fish.

How fearful
And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!
The fishermen that walk upon the beach Appear like mice. Shakspeare's King Lear.

At length two monsters of unequal size,
Hard by the shore, a fisherman espies. Waller.

Do scales and fins bear price to this excess?
You might have bought the fishermen for less.
Dryden's Juvenal.

FISHERTOWN. n. f. [fisher and town.]

A town inhabited by fishermen.

Others of them, in that time burned that fishertown Mousehole. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Lime in Dorsetshire, a little fishertown.
Clarendon.

FISHERY. n. f. [from fisher.] The business of catching fish.

We shall have plenty of mackerel this season;
our fishery will not be disturbed by privateers.
Addison's Spectator.

FISHFUL. adj. [from fish.] Abounding with fish; stored with fish.

Thus mean in state, and calm in sprite,
My fishful pond is my delight. Carew.

It is walled and guarded with the ocean, most commodious for traffick to all parts of the world, and water'd with pleasant, fishful, and navigable rivers. Camden's Remains.

TO FISHIFY. v. a. [from fish.] To turn to fish: a cant word.

Here comes Romeo.
—Without his roe, like a dried herring:
O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified. Shakspeare.

FISHING. n. f. [from fish.] Commodity of taking fish.

There also would be planted a good town, having both a good haven and a plentiful fishing.
Spenser on Ireland.

FISHKETTLE. n. f. [fish and kettle.] A caldron made long for the fish to be boiled without bending.

It is probable that the way of embalming amongst the Egyptians was by boiling the body in a long caldron like a fish-kettle, in some kind of liquid balsam. Grew's Museum.

FISHMEAL. n. f. [fish and meal.] Diet of fish; abstemious diet.

Thin drink doth overcool their blood, and making many fishmeals, they fall into a kind of male greenickness. Sharp.

FISHMONGER. n. f. [from fish.] A dealer in fish; a seller of fish.

I fear to play the fishmonger; and yet so large a commodity may not pass in silence. Carew.

The surgeon left the fishmonger to determine the controversy between him and the pike.
L'Estrange.

FISHY. adj. [from fish.]

1. Consisting of fish.

2. Inhabited by fish.

My absent mates
Bait the barb'd steel, and from the fishy flood Appease th' afflictive fierce desire of food.
Pope.

3. Having the qualities or form of fish.

Few eyes have escaped the picture of mermaids, that is, according to Horace, a monster with a woman's head above, and fishy extremity below. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FISSILE. adj. [fissilis, Latin.] Having the grain in a certain direction, so as to be cleft.

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water or crystal of the rock, and without colour; enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and in a very strong heat calcining without fusion. Newton's Opticks.

FISSI'LITY. n. f. [from fissile.] The quality of admitting to be cloven.

FISSURE. n. f. [fissura, Latin; fissure, French.] A cleft; a narrow chasm where a breach has been made.

The stone was distinguished into strata or layers; those strata were divided by parallel fissures, that were inclosed in the stone. Woodw.
I see

The gaping fissures to receive the rain. Thomson

TO FISSURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cleave; to make a fissure.

By a fall or blow the skull may be fissured or fractured. Wiseman.

FIST. n. f. [fist, Saxon.] The hand clenched with the fingers doubled down, in order to give a blow, or keep hold.

She quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;

Another time, quoth she, become more wise;
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace

And being down, the villain fore did beat
And bruise with clownish fists his manly face.

Anger causeth paleness in some; in others trembling, swelling, and bending the fist Bacon.

And the same hand into a fist may close,
Which instantly a palm expanded shows

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clenc'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden

TO FIST. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I saw him spurning and fisting her most unmercifully. Dryden

2. To gripe with the fist.

We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakspeare.

FISTINUT. n. f. A pistachio nut.

FISTICUFFS. n. f. [fist and cuff.] Battle with the fist; blows with the fist.

Naked men belabouring one another with snagged sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at fisticuffs. Moore

She would seize upon John's commons: for which they were sure to go to fisticuffs. Arbuth.

My invention and judgment are perpetually at fisticuffs, 'till they have quite disabled each other. Swift.

FISTULA. n. f. [Latin; fistule, French.]

1. A sinuous ulcer callous within; any sinuous ulcer.

That fistula which is recent is the easiest of cure: those of a long continuance are accompanied with ulcerations of the gland, and caries in the bone. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. FISTULA Lachrymalis. A disorder of the canals leading from the eye to the nose, which obstructs the natural progress of the tears, and makes them trickle down the cheek; but this is only the first and mildest stage of the disease; in the next there is matter discharged with the tears from the puncta lachrymalia, and sometimes from an orifice broke through the skin between the nose and angle of the eye.
The last and worst degree of it is when the matter of the eye, by its long continuance, has not only corroded the neighbouring soft parts, but also affected the subjacent bone. Sharp's Surg.

FISTULAR. adj. [from fistula.] Hollow like a pipe.

FISTULOUS. adj. [from fistula; fistuleux, French.] Having the nature of a fistula; callous or sinuous like a fistula.

How these sinuous ulcers become fistulous, I have shewn you. Wiseman's Surgery.

FIT. n. f. [from fight, Skinner, every fit of a disease being a struggle of nature;
from viit in Flemish, frequent, Junius.]

1. A paroxysm or exacerbation of any intermittent distemper.

Small stones and gravel collect and become very large in the kidneys, in which case a fit of the stone in that part is the cure. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Any short return after intermission; interval.

Sometimes 'tis grateful to the rich to try
A short vicissitude, and fit of poverty. Dryden.

Men that are habitually wicked may now and then, by fits and starts, feel certain motions of repentance. L'Esrange.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs and falling tears. Addison on Italy.

Thus o'er the cying lamp th' unsteady flame
Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits,
And falls again as loath to quit its hold. Addif

Religion is not the business of some fits only and intervals of our life, to be taken up at certain days and hours, but a system of precepts to be regarded in all our conduct. Rogers.

All fits of pleasure we balanced by an equal degree of pain or languor: 'tis like spending this year, part of the next year's revenue. Swift.

3. Any violent affection of mind or body.

The life did fit away out of her nest,
And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress'd.

An ambitious man puts it in the power of every malicious tongue to throw him into a fit of melancholy. Addison.

4. Disorder; distemperature.

For your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

5. It is used without an epithet of discrimination, for the hysterical disorders of women, and the convulsions of children;
and by the vulgar for the epilepsy.

Mrs. Bull was so much enraged, that she fell downright into a fit. Arbuthnot.

6. It was anciently used for any recommencement after intermission. The parts of a song, or cantos of a poem were called fits.

FIT. adj. [vitten, Flemish, Junius.]

1. Qualified; proper: with for before the noun, and to before the verb.

Men of valour, fit to go out for war and battle.

He lends him vain Goliath's sacred sword,
The fittest help just fortune could afford. Corwley.
This fury fit for her intent she chose,
One who delights in wais and human woes.

It is a wrong use of my understanding to make it the rule and measure of another man's; a use which it is neither fit for, nor capable of. Locke.

2. Convenient; meet; proper; right.

Since we have said it were good not to use men of ambitious natures, except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are so.

See how thou could'st judge of fit and meet.

It is fit for a man to know his own abilities and weaknesses, and not think himself obliged to imitate all that he thinks fit to praise. Boyle.

If our forefathers thought fit to be grave and serious, I hope their posterity may laugh without offence. Addison.

TO FIT. v. a. [vitten, Flemish, Junius.]

1. To accommodate to any thing; to suit one thing to another.

The carpenter marketh it out with a line: he fitteth it with planes. Isaiah.

Would fate permit
To my desires I might my fortune fit, Troy I would raise. Denham.

2. To accommodate a person with any thing: as, the tailor fits his customer.

A trussmaker fitted the child with a pair of boddice, stiffened on the lame side. Wiseman.

3. To be adapted to; to suit any thing.

She shall be our messenger to this poultry knight: trust me I thought on her; she'll fit it.

As much of the stone as was contiguous to the marcasite, fitted the marcasite so close as if it had been formerly liquid. Boyle.

4. TO FIT out. To furnish; to equip;
to supply with necessaries or decoration.

A play, which if you dare but twice fit out,
You'll all be slander'd, and be thought devout.

The English fleet could not be paid and manned, and fitted out, unless we encouraged trade and navigation. Addison's Freeholder.

5. TO FIT up. To furnish; to make proper for the use or reception of any.

He has fitted up his farm. Pope to Swift.

TO FIT. v. n. To be proper; to be becoming.

How evil fits it me to have such a son; and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness. Sidney.

Nor fits it to prolong the feast,
Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest. Pope.

FITCH. n. f. [A colloquial corruption of vetch.] A small kind of wild pea.

Now is the season
For sowing of fitches, of beans, and of peason.

FITCHAT. } n. f. [fissau, French; fisse, FITCHUW. } Dutch.] A stinking little beast, that robs the hen roost and warren.

Skinner calls him the stinking ferret; but he is much larger, at least as some provinces distinguish them, in which the polecat is termed a fitchat, and the stinking ferret a float.

'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfumed one:

What do you mean by this haunting of me?

The fitchat, the fulmart, and the like creatures, live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth. Walton's Angler.

FITFUL. adj. [fit and full] Varied by paroxysms; disordered by change of maladies.

Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shaksp.

FITLY. adv. [from fit.]

1. Properly; justly; reasonably.

Even so most fitly
As you malign our senators. Shakspeare.

Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage.

I cannot fitlier compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.

The whole of our duty may be expressed most fitly by departing from evil. Tillotson.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude,
Sun or stars are fitliest view'd
At their brightest; but to conclude Of longitudes, what other way have we But to mark when, and where the dark eclipses be. Donne.

An animal, in order to be moveable must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FITMENT. n. f. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose. Not used.

Poor beseeching: 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then follow'd. Shakspeare.

FITNESS. n. f. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fitness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hooker.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Wer't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear Thy flesh and bones. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place
Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:
They've made themselves, and that their fitness
now

Does unmake you. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

FITTER. n. f. [from fit.]

1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fitter of it for corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. [from fetta, Italian; fetzen, German.] A small piece: as, to cut into fitters.

Skinner.

FITZ. n. f. [Norman, from fil, a son, Fr.]

A son. Only used in law and genealogy: as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.

FIVE. adj. [𐐱𐐽, Saxon.] Four and one; half of ten.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. Matthew.

No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like fix fingers to the hand, when nature, which is superfluous in nothing, can do her work with five. Dryden.

Five herds, five bleating flocks, his pastures fill'd. Dryden.

Our British youth lose their figure by that time they are five and twenty. Addison.

FIVELEAVED Grass. n. f. Cinquefoil; a species of clover.

FIVES. n. f.

1. A kind of play with a bowl.

2. A disease of horses.

His horse sped with spavins, rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, and stark spoiled with the staggers. Shakspeare.

TO FIX. v. a. [fixer, Fr. fixus, Lat.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell hear'd th' unsufferable noise, hell saw Heav'n ruining from heav'n, and would have fled Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep
Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milton.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest seraph! tell
In which of all these orbs hath man
His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,
But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell! Milton.

One loves fixed laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.

When custom hath fixed his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight!
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,
Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprise.
Dryden's Æneid.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fixed. Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,
A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs. Sandys.

6. To withhold from motion.

TO FIX. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. L'Estrange.

He made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy,
Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Dryd.

In most bodies not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. To rest; to cease to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear,
Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Waller.

3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.

FIXATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

2. Residence in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or pliancy, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less material, than to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Glanville.

FIXEDLY. adv. [from fixed.]

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

2. Steadfastly.

Omnipotency, omniscience, and infinite goodness enlarge the spirit while it fixtly looks on them. Burnet.

FIXEDNESS. n. f. [from fixed.]

1. Stability; firmness.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. K. Charles.

FIXIDITY. n. f. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to the fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FIXITY. n. f. [fixité, French.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newton's Opticks.

FIXTURE. n. f. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixture of her eye hath motion in 't,
As we were mock'd with art. Shakspeare.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait. Shakspeare.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture. Shakspeare.

FIXGIG. n. f. A kind of dart or harpoon with which seamen strike fish.

Can't thou with fixgigs pierce him to the quick,
Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick? Sandys.

FLABBY. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbuthnot.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLABILE. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown.

Diä.

FLACCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beareth, waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Holder.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuth.

FLACCIDITY. n. f. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wifeman's Surgery.

TO FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; pleogan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton-wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body:
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood: for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben Jonson.

His stomach will want victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison's Spectator.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbutnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, time is blind:
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find:
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.

2. [from flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor were all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Exodus.

Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
Can flags there flourish where no waters flow? Sandys.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement. Shakspeare's King John.

He hangs out as many flags as he descryeth vessels; square, if ships; if galleys, pendants. Sandys' Travels.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are stirps of nobles: for if mens eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flags of pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be girt
With all the grisly legion that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron, Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The French and Spaniards, when your flags appear, Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag, is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden.

Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,
In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryd.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [flache, old French.]

Part of two flags, striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward.

FLAG-BROOM. n. f. [from flag and broom.]

A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

A commander of a squadron.

Her grandfather was a flag-officer. Addison.

FLAG-SHIP. n. f. [flag and ship.]

The ship in which the commander of a fleet is.

FLAG-WORM. n. f. [flag and worm.]

A grub bred in watery places among flags or sedge.

He will in the three hot months bite at a flag-worm, or a green gentle. Walton's Angler.

FLAGELET. n. f. [flageolet, French.]

A small flute; a small instrument of wind musick.

Play us a lesson on your flagelet. More.

FLAGELLATION. n. f. [from flagello, Latin.]

The use of the scourge.

By Bridewell all descend,
As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth.

FLAGGINESS. n. f. [from flaggy.]

Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLAGGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Fairy Queen.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryden's Virgil.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a cole-wort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon's Natural History.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Latin.]

1. Wicked; villanous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitiosus.]

Wickedness; villany.

FLA'GON. n. f. [flaccid, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flaske, Danish; flacon, French; flasco, Italian; flasco, Spanish.]

A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

More had sent him by a suitor in chancey two silver flagons. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Did they coin pispots, bowls, and flagons Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,
Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or flint him in his drink. Dryden's Juvenal.

FLA'GRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.]

Burning; heat; fire.

Lust cautech a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon.

FLA'GRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let steady justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay. Smith.

FLAGRA'TION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.]

Burning. DiB.

FLA'GSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.]

The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody crosses on his flagstuffs rise. Dryden.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; flagel, German.]

The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thrasher.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail had thresh'd the corn,
That ten-day labourers could not end. Milton.
In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense.
Dryden.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Locke.

The threshers, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE. n. f. [floccus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element,
when the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made afraid.
Fairy Queen.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew's Cosmolog.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it received the perfect form the teeth would make. Moxon.

To FLEAK. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow.
Pope's Odyssey.

To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminæ;
to part in loose bodies.

FLA'KY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east. Shak.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.
Pope.

Hence, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain.
Blackmore.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminæ.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old aruspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lies immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,
To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd.
Hudibras.

God is not to be flammed off with lies, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not.
South.

FLAMBEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy.
Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme,
French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is so hot, as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him
now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
In both our English genius is express'd,
Lofty and bold but negligently dress'd. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.
Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakespeare.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing fable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flamecoloured stockings. Shakespeare.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and cholerick aspect, in a flamecoloured garment. Peacham.

FLAMEN. n. f. [Latin.] A priest; one that officiates in solemn offices.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood.
Pope.

FLAMMABILITY. n. f. [flamma, Latin.]
The quality of admitting to be set on fire, so as to blaze.

In the sulphur of bodies torried, that is, the oily, fat, and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability. Brown.

FLAMMATION. n. f. [flammatio, Latin.]
The act of setting on flame.

White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial,
and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FLA'MMEOUS. adj. [flammeus, Latin.]
Consisting of flame; resembling flame.

This flammeous light is not over all the body.
Brown.

FLAMMI'FEROUS. adj. [flammifer, Lat.] Bringing flame. Diä.

FLAMMI'VOMOUS. adj. [flamma and vomo, Latin.] Vomiting out flame. Diä.

FLA'MY. adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter;
and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon.

FLANK. n. f. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from λαγών; more probably from latus, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank. Peacham.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends.
Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from their rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank.
Bacon's War with Spain.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

To right and left the front Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain.
Harris.

To FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With fates averse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert
lay. Dryden.

FLA'NKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and fore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knolles.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,
Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers. Fairfax.

To FLA'NKER. v. a. [flanquer, French.]
To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLA'NNEL. n. f. [gwlanen, Welsh; from gwlan, wool, Davies.] A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welsh flannel. Shaksp.

FLAP. n. f. [læppe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. A disease in horses.

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: cut some slashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure. Farrier's Dict.

TO FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flapt off the former, and devoured the other. L'Estrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings. Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil

Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Philips.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;

And shrieking at her window thrice
The raven flapp'd his wing. Tickel.

TO FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.

The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To fall with flaps or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay.

FLA'PDRAGON. n. f. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at quoits well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys. Shaksp.

TO FLA'PDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.]

To swallow; to devour. Low cant.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flapdragoned it. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

FLA'PEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whorson, beetle-headed flapeared knave. Shaksp.

TO FLARE. v. a. [from flederen, to flutter, Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glare.]

1. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head. Shaksp.

2. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours, and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, ring. Herbert.

3. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.

4. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay

Flaring in sunshine all the day. Prior.

FLASH. n. f. [φάλαξ, Minshew.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it. Shaksp.

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smok;
The other out of smok brings glorious light. Roscommon.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,
Defy'd the fork lightning from afar,
At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols?
your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shaksp.

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

TO FLASH. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times, almost like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Felton on the Classics.

TO FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
The waves about, and all his armour swept,
That all the blood and filth away was wash'd. Fairy Queen.

If the sea-water be flushed with a stick or oar, the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carew.

FLA'SHER. n. f. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality. Diſt.

FLA'SHILY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit, or solidity of thought.

FLA'SHY. adj. [from flashy.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby on the Soul, Dedica.

When they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scannell pipes of wretched straw. Milton.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,
Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;

Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryden.

2. [from flaccidus, Skinner.] Insipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled hocks are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon's Essays.

The tastes that most offend in fruits, herbs, and roots, are bitter, harsh, sour, watery or flashy. Bacon's Natural History.

FLASK. n. f. [flasque, French.]

1. A bottle; a vessel.

Then for the Bourdeaux you may freely ask;
But the Champagne is to each man his flask. King.

2. A powder-horn.

Powder in a skilless soldier's flask
Is set on fire. Shaksp.

FLA'SKET. n. f. [from flask.] A vessel in which viands are served.

Another plac'd
The silver stands with golden flaskets grac'd. Pope's Odyssey.

FLAT. adj. [plat, French.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.

Thou, all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shaksp.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect. Addison on Italy.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of bosage. Bacon.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.

Cease t' admire, and beauty's plumes
Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden slighting quite abasht. Milton.

4. Level with the ground.

In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. Milton's Paradise Regained.

That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation. South.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.

The wood-born people fall before her flat,
And worship her as goddess of the wood. Fairy Queen.

That lamentable wound,
Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground. Daniel.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.

He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shaksp.

Taste so divine! that what of sweet before Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton.

The miry fields
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.

Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droop,
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milton.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shaksp.

To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unfavoury. Atterb.

11. Preremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discreet stays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser's State of Ireland.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
—I will, that's flat. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton's Parad. Lost.
If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his meer clod of earth, the spacious sky.
Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras.
12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in found.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.
The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp.
Ray on the Creation.

FLAT. n. f.

1. A level; an extended plane.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton's Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit.
Addison on Italy.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'erstop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head, O'erhears your officers. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shaks.

Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taking by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them.
Shakspeare's King John.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats.
Shakspeare.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.
Having newly left these grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits, in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy.
Milton.

Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray.
Dryden

Must we now have occasion of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation?
Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A darted mandate came From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that slay behind.
Dryden.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or promi-nences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills?
Bentley.

To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground,
they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Disfends their swelling lips, and flats their nose.
Creech.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four feet deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flattened. Bacon.

To FLAT. v. n.

1. To grow flat: opposed to swell.

I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

2. To render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

FLATLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downward; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given?
—An it had fallen flatlong. Shakspeare's Tempest.

FLATLY. adv. [from flat.]

1. Horizontally; without inclination.

2. Without prominence or elevation.

3. Without spirit; dully; frigidly.

4. Peremptorily; downright.

He in these wars had flatly refused his aid.
Sidney.

Thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience, or support. Dan.

Unjust, thou say'st,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milt.

Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, exclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLATNESS. n. f. [from flat.]

1. Evenness; level extension.

2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the coiner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Medals.

3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father:
Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shakspeare.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and imper-tinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pale of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon.

To FLATTEN. v. a. [flatir, French; from flat.]1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.

2. To beat down to the ground.
If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer.

3. To make vapid.

4. To deject; to depress; to dispirit.

To FLATTEN. v. n.

1. To grow even or level.

2. To grow dull and insipid.

Here joys that endure for ever, fresh and in vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeits, and flatten in the very tasting. L'Estrange.

FLATTER. n. f. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.To FLATTER. v. a. [flatter, French.]1. To soothe with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered.
Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for 's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;

What his breast forges that his tongue must vent.
Shakspeare.

He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Proverbs.

He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Psalms.

After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

Averse alike to flatter or offend. Pope.
I scorn to flatter you or any man. Newton.

2. To praise falsely.

Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
Provoke our censure. Young.

3. To please; to soothe. This sense is purely gallick.

A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flattens them. Dryden.

4. To raise false hopes.

He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flatt'ring gales Unmindful. Milton.

FLATTERER. n. f. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsties.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perform.

Bacon

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.

Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants.

Addison's Guardian.

The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer.

Swift.

FLATTERY. n. f. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,

And hold it mean to borrow ought from flattery.

Rowe.

Simple pride for flatteries makes demands.
See how they beg an alms of flattery!

They languish, O! support them with a lye.

Young.

FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape.

Woodward on Fossils.

FLATULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency.

Arbutnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions.

Glanville.

FLATULENT. adj. [from flatulentus, status, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion.

Arbutnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again.

Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity.

Glanville.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works

Dryden.

FLATUOSITY. n. f. [from flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit of wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly.

Bacon

FLATUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine.

FLATUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discussed by warm aromatics.

Quincy.

FLATWISE. adj. [flat and wise; so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downward; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposit.

Woodward on Fossils

TO FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove

With flaunting honeysuckle

Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immolate their own desires to their vanity.

Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For uselefs ornament and flaunting show:

We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.

Dryden.

You sot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family.

Arbutnot.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade.

Pope.

FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble, Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence!

Shakspeare.

FLAVOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows.

Dryden.

FLAVOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind.

Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [from flāw, to break; plow, Saxon, a garment.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the lung-hole open.

Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw.

Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound.

Dryd.

As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball.

Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail china-jar receive a flaw.

Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin.

Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scribes and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn.

Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth but probability.

Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw.

Hudibras.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires.

Addison.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception.

Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flō, Latin.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he's flint;

As humorous as winter, and as sudden

As flaws congealed the spring of day.

Shakspeare.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall, t' expel the winter's flaw.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

As a huge fish, laid

Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw afraid,

Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Eurialus.

Chapman's Iliad.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,

Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrafcias rend the woods, and seas upturn.

Milton.

I heard the rack,

As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,

Are to the main inconsiderable.

Milton.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my head

Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw.

Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town.

Came pouring in; I heard the mighty flaw;
When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw

Which choak'd the passage.

Dryden's Aureng.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a Winter's fire.

Shakspeare.

TO FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,

Alack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,

Burst smilingly.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup.

Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd.

Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath at-tach'd

Our merchant's goods.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous.

Boyle.

FLAWN. n. f. [from plena, Saxon; flan French; vlaye, Dutch.] A sort of custard; a pie-baked in a dish,

Fill oven full of flaws, Ginny pass not for sleep,
To-morrow thy father his wake-day will keep.

To FLA'WTER. v. a. To scrape or pare a skin.

FLA'WY. adj. [from flaw.] Full of flaws.
FLAX. n. f. [flex, flex, Saxon; vlas, Dutch.]

1. The fibrous plant of which the finest thread is made.

2. The fibres of flax cleansed and combed for the spinner.

I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs,
T' apply to 's bleeding face.

Then on the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace,
And turning sung.

FLA'XCOMB. n. f. [flax and comb.] The instrument with which the fibres or flax are cleansed from the brittle parts.

FLA'XDRESSER. n. f. [flax and dress.] He that prepares flax for the spinner.

FLA'XEN. adj. [from flax.]

1. Made of flax.

The matron at her nightly task,
With pensive labour draws the flaxen thread.

The best materials for making ligatures are the flaxen thread that shoemakers use.

2. Fair, long, and flowing, as if made of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig

FLA'XWEED. n. f. A plant.

To FLAY. v. a. [ad flaa, Islandick; flae, Danish; vlaen, Dutch.]

1. To strip off the skin.

I must have been eaten with wild beasts, or have fallen into the hands of the Spaniards, and been flayed alive.

Whilst the old levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices.

Then give command the sacrifice to haste;
Let the flay'd victims in the plains be cast;
And sacred vows, and mystick song, apply'd
To grisly Pluto and his gloomy bride.

2. To take off the skin or surface of any thing.

They flay their skin from off them, break their bones, and chop them in pieces.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins.

FLA'YER. n. f. [from flay.] He that strips off the skin of any thing.

FLEA. n. f. [plea, Saxon; vloye, Dutch; fleach, Scottish.] A small red insect remarkable for its agility in leaping, which sucks the blood of larger animals.

While wormwood hath seed, get a handful or twain,

To save against March to make flea to refrain:
Where chamber is swept, and wormwood is strown,

No flea for his life dare abide to be known.

A valiant flea that dares eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture.

To FLEA. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from fleas.

FLE'ABANE. n. f. [flea and bane.] A plant.

It hath undivided leaves, which, for the most part, are glutinous, and have a strong scent: the cup of the flower is for the most part scaly, and of a cylindrical form: the flower is composed of many florets, which are succeeded by seeds with a downy substance adhering to them.

FLE'ABITE. } n. f. [flea and bite.]
FLE'ABITING. }

1. Red marks caused by fleas.

The attendance of a cancer is commonly a breaking out all over the body, like a fleabiting.

2. A small hurt or pain like that caused by the sting of a flea.

A gout, a cholick, a cutting off an arm or leg, or searing the flesh, are but fleabites to the pains of the soul.

The same expence that breaks one man's back, is not a fleabiting to another.

FLE'ABITTEN. adj. [flea and bite.]

1. Stung by fleas.

2. Mean; worthless.

Fleabitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of Presbyt'ry, where laymen guide,
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.

FLEAK. v. a. [from floccus, Latin. See FLAKE.] A small lock, thread, or twist.

The businesses of men depend upon these little long fleaks or threads of hemp and flax.

FLEAM. n. f. [corrupted from φλεβοτομος, the instrument used in phlebotomy.] An instrument used to bleed cattle, which is placed on the vein, and then driven by a blow.

FLE'AWORT. n. f. [flea and wort.] A plant.

To FLECK. v. a. [fleck, German, a spot, Skinner: perhaps it is derived from fleak, or fleke, an old word for a grate, hurdle, or any thing made of parts laid transverse, from the Islandick flake.] To spot; to streak; to stripe; to dapple; to variegate.

Let it not see the dawning fleck the skies,
Nor the grey morning from the ocean rise.

Fleck'd in her face, and with disorder'd hair
Her garments ruffled, and her bosom bare.

Both fleck'd with white, the true Arcadian strain.

To FLE'CKER. v. a. [from fleck.] To spot; to mark with strokes or touches of different colours; to mark with red wheelkes.

The grey-ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,

Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light;

And darkness flecker'd, like a drunkard, reels
From forth day's path, and Titan's burning wheels.

FLED. The preterit and participle; not properly of fly, to use the wings, but of flee, to run away.

Truth is fled far away, and leasing is hard at hand.

In vain for life he to the altar fled;
Ambition and revenge have certain speed.

FLEDGE. adj. [flederen, to fly, Dutch.] Full-feathered; able to fly; qualified to leave the nest.

We did find
The shells of fledge souls left behind.

Illustrious on his shoulders, fledge with wings,
Lay waving round.

To FLEDGE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To furnish with wings; to supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledged enough to shift for themselves.

The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones, till they be fledged and come almost to full bigness in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of Providence.

The sandals of celestial mould,
Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,

Surround her feet.

To FLEE. v. n. pret. fled. [This word is now almost universally written fly, though properly to fly, pleogan, fleav, is to move with wings, and flee, flean, to run away. They are now confounded.] To run from danger; to have recourse to shelter.

Behold, this city is near to flee unto.

Macduff is fled to England.

That Lyce painted; should they flee
Like simple birds into a net,

None of us fall into those circumstances of danger, want, or pain, that can have hopes of relief but from God alone; none in all the world to flee to, but him.

FLEECE. n. f. [flyr, fleyr, Saxon; vleese, Dutch.] As much wool as is shorn from one sheep.

Giving account of the annual increase
Both of their lambs and of their woolly fleece.

So many days my ewes have been with young,
So many months ere I shall shear the fleece.

I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleece that I graze.

Sailors have used every night to hang *fleece*s of wool on the sides of their ships, towards the water; and they have crushed fresh water out of them in the morning.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the *fleece*s.

To FLEECE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To clip the fleece off a sheep.

2. To strip; to pull; to plunder, as a sheep is robbed of its wool.

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are tempted to take bribes, and to fleece the people.

FLEE'CED. adj. [from fleece.] Having *fleece*s of wool.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleece'd flock,

Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that with the terror of the shock
Astonied both stand senseless as a block.

FLEE'CY. adj. [from fleece.] Woolly; covered with wool.

Not all the fleecey wealth
That doth enrich these downs is worth a thought
To that my errand.

From eastern point
Of Liba, to the fleecey star, that bears
Andromeda far off Atlantic seas.

Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn;
Let fleecey flocks her rising hills adorn.

The good shepherd tends his fleecey care,
Seeks freshest pasture, and the purest air;
Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep directs.

To FLEER. v. n. [pleandian, to trifle, Sax. fleardan, Scottish. Skinner thinks it formed from leer.]

1. To mock; to gibe; to jest with insolence and contempt.

F L E

- You speak to Casca, and to such a man
That is no fleeing tell-tale. Shakspeare.
Dares the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antick face,
To flee and scorn at our solemnity! Shakspeare.
Do I, like the female tribe,
Think it well to flee and gibe? Swift.
2. To leer; to grin with an air of civility.
How popular and courteous; how they grin and flee upon every man they meet! Burton.
- FLEER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Mockery expressed either in words or looks.
Encave yourself,
And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns,
That dwell in every region of his face. Shaksp.
2. A deceitful grin of civility.
He shall generally spy such false lines, and such a fly treacherous flee upon the face of deceivers, that he shall be sure to have a cast of their eye to warn him, before they give him a cast of their nature to betray him. South.
- FLE'ERER. n. f. [from flee.] A mocker;
a fawner. Diſ.
- FLEET, FLEOT, FLOT. Are all derived from the Saxon pleot, which signifies a bay or gulf. Gibson's Camden.
- FLEET. n. f. [plota, Saxon.] A company of ships; a navy.
Our pray'rs are heard; our master's fleet shall go
As far as winds can bear, or waters flow. Prior.
- FLEET. n. f. [pleot, Saxon, an estuary, or arm of the sea.] A creek; an inlet of water. A provincial word, from which the Fleet prison and Fleet-street are named.
They have a very good way in Essex of draining lands that have land-floods or fleets running through them, which make a kind of a small creek. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- FLEET. adj. [flotur, Islandick.]
1. Swift of pace; quick; nimble; active.
Upon that shore he spied Atin stand;
There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phædria's fleet bark. Fairy Queen.
I take him for the better dog:
—Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet,
I would esteem him worth a dozen such. Shaksp.
He had in his stables one of the fleetest horses in England. Clarendon.
His fear was greater than his haste;
For fear, though fleeter than the wind,
Believes 'tis always left behind. Hudibras.
So fierce they drove, their courfers were so fleet,
That the turf trembled underneath their feet. Dryden.
He told us that the welkin would be clear
When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air. Gay.
2. [In the husbandry of some provinces.]
Light; superficially fruitful.
Marl cope-ground is a cold, stiff, wet clay,
unless where it is very fleet for pasture. Mortimer.
3. Skimming the surface. Cant word.
Those lands must be plowed fleet. Mortimer.
- To FLEET. v. n. [plotan, Saxon.]
1. To fly swiftly; to vanish.
How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair!
Shakspeare.
A wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet. Shakspeare.
2. To be in a transient state; the same with flit.
Our understanding, to make a complete notion,
must add something else to this fleeing and unremarkable superficialities, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby on Bodies.

F L E

- O fleeing joys
Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woe!
Milton.
While I listen to thy voice,
Chloris! I feel my life decay:
That powerful noise Calls my fleeing soul away. Waller.
As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,
Their fleeing forms scarce sooner found than lost. Prior.
- To FLEET. v. a.
1. To skim the water.
Who swelling sails in Caspian sea doth cross,
And in frail wood an Adrian gulph doth fleet,
Doth not, I ween, so many evils meet. Fairy Q.
2. To live merrily, or pass time away lightly.
Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly as they did in the golden age. Shakspeare.
3. [In the country.] To skim milk; to take off the cream: whence the word fleeing dish.
- FLE'ETINGDISH. n. f. [from fleet and dish.] A skimming bowl.
- FLE'ETLY. adv. [from fleet.] Swiftly;
nimble; with swift pace.
- FLE'ETNESS. n. f. [from fleet.] Swiftneſs of course; nimbleness; celerity; velocity; speed; quickness.
- FLESH. n. f. [flæc, flærc, Saxon;
vleesch, Dutch; fleol, Erſe.]
1. The body distinguished from the soul.
As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable. Shaksp. Rich. II.
A disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine. Shakspeare.
And thou, my soul, which turn'st with curious eye
To view the beams of thine own form divine,
Know, that thou can'st know nothing perfectly,
While thou art clouded with this flesh of mine. Davies.
2. The muscles distinguished from the skin, bones, tendons.
A spirit hath not flesh and bones. New Testa.
3. Animal food distinguished from vegetable.
Flesh should be forborne as long as he is in coats, or at least till he is two or three years old. Locke.
Flesh, without being qualified with acids, is too alkalescent a diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
Acidity in the infant may be cured by a flesh diet in the nurse. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
4. The body of beasts or birds used in food, distinct from fishes.
There is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
We mortify ourselves with fish; and think we fare coarsely, if we abstain from the flesh of other animals. Brown.
5. Animal nature.
The end of all flesh is come before me. Gen.
6. Carnality; corporal appetites.
Name not religion; for thou lov'st the flesh. Shakspeare.
Fasting serves to mortify the flesh, and subdue
the lusts thereof. Smalridge's Sermons.
7. A carnal state; worldly disposition: in theology.
They that are in the flesh cannot please God. Romans
The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. Galatians.
8. Near relation: a scriptural use.
Let not our hand be upon him; for he is our flesh. Genesis.
When thou seest the naked, cover him; and hide not thyself from thine own flesh. Isaiah.

F L E

9. The outward or literal sense. The orientals termed the immediate or literal signification of any precept or type the flesh, and the remote or typical meaning the spirit. This is frequent in St. Paul.
Ye judge after the flesh. John.
- To FLESH. v. a.
1. To initiate; from the sportsman's practice of feeding his hawks and dogs with the first game that they take, or training them to pursuit by giving them the flesh of animals.
Full bravely hast thou fleſht
Thy maiden sword. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Every puny swordsman will think him a good tame quarry to enter and fleſh himself upon. Government of the Tongue.
2. To harden; to establish in any practice, as dogs by often feeding on any thing.
These princes finding them so fleſht in cruelty, as not to be reclaimed, secretly undertook the matter alone. Sidney.
The women ran all away, saving only one, who was so fleſht in malice that neither during nor after the fight she gave any truce to her cruelty. Sidney.
3. To glut; to satiate.
Harry from curb'd licence plucks
The muzzle of restraint; and the wild dog Shall fleſh his tooth on every innocent. Shaksp.
He hath perverted a young gentlewoman, and this night he fleſhes his will in the spoil of her honour. Shakspeare.
The kindred of him that hath been fleſht upon us;
And he is bred out of that bloody strain,
That hunted us in our familiar paths. Shaksp.
- FLE'SHBROATH. n. f. [fleſh and broath.]
Broath made by decocting flesh.
Her leg being emaciated, I advised bathing it with fleſhbroath, wherein had been decocted emollient herbs. Wifeman.
- FLE'SHCOLOUR. n. f. [fleſh and colour.]
The colour of flesh.
A complication of ideas together makes up the single complex idea, which he calls man, whereof white or fleſhcolour in England is one. Locke.
A loose earth of a pale fleſhcolour, that is, white with a bluish of red, is found in a mountain in Cumberland. Woodward.
- FLE'SHFLY. n. f. [fleſh and fly.] A fly that feeds upon flesh, and deposits her eggs in it.
I would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than I would suffer
The fleſhfly blow my mouth. Shakspeare.
It is a wonderful thing in fleſhflies, that a fly-maggot in five days space after it is hatched, arrives at its full growth and perfect magnitude. Ray on the Creation.
- FLE'SHHOOK. n. f. [fleſh and hook.] A hook to draw flesh from the caldron.
All that the fleſh-hook brought up the priest took. 1 Samuel.
- FLE'SHLESS. adj. [from fleſh.] Without flesh.
- FLE'SHLINESS. n. f. [from fleſhly.] Carnal passions or appetites.
When strong passions or weak fleſhlineſs
Would from the right way seek to draw him wide,
He would, through temperance and steadfastness, Teach him the weak to strengthen, and the strong suppress. Spenser.
Corrupt manners in living, breed false judgment in doctrine: sin and fleſhlineſs bring forth sects and heresies. Ascham.
- FLE'SHLY. adj. [from fleſh.]
1. Corporeal.

Nothing resembles death so much as sleep;
Yet then our minds themselves from slumber keep,
When from their fleshy bondage they are free.
Denham.

2. Carnal; lascivious.

Belial, the dissolute spirit that fell,
The sensualest; and, after Asmodai,
The fleshliest incubus.
Paradise Regain'd.

3. Animal; not vegetable.

'Tis then for nought that mother earth provides
The stores of all the shows, and all the hides,
If men with fleshy morsels must be fed,
And chaw with bloody teeth the breathing bread.
Dryden.

4. Human; not celestial; not spiritual.

Else, never could the force of fleshy arm
Ne molten metal in his flesh embue. F. Queen.
Th' eternal Lord in fleshy shrine
Enwombed was, from wretched Adam's line,
To purge away the guilt of sinful crime. F. Queen.
Much ostentation, vain fleshy arm,
And of frail arms, much instrument of war
Before mine eyes thou'st set. Milton's Par. Reg.

FLE'SHMEAT. n. f. [flesh and meat.] Animal food; the flesh of animals prepared for food.

The most convenient diet is that of fleshmeats.
Floyer.

In this prodigious plenty of cattle and dearth of human creatures, fleshmeat is monstrously dear.
Swift.

FLE'SHMENT. n. f. [from flesh.] Eagerness gained by a successful initiation.

He got praises of the king,
For him attempting who was self-subdued;
And in the fleshment of his dread exploit Drew on me here again. Shakspeare.

FLE'SHMONGER. n. f. [from flesh.] One who deals in flesh; a pimp.

Was the duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him? Shakspeare.

FLE'SHPOT. n. f. [flesh and pot.] A vessel in which flesh is cooked; thence plenty of flesh.

If he takes away the fleshpots, he can also alter the appetite.
Taylor's Rule for Living Holy.

FLE'SHQUAKE. n. f. [flesh and quake.] A tremour of the body: a word formed by Jonson in imitation of earthquake.

They may, blood-shaken then,
Feel such a fleshquake to possess their powers,
As they shall cry like ours:
In sound of peace or wars,
No harp e'er hit the stars. Ben Jonson's New Inn.

FLE'SHY. adj. [from flesh.]

1. Plump; full of flesh; fat; musculous.

All Ethiopes are fleshy and plump, and have great lips; all which betoken moisture retained, and not drawn out. Bacon.

We say it is a fleshy stile when there is much periphrases and circuit of words, and when with more than enough it grows fat and corpulent.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

The sole of his foot is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick skin; but very fit to travel in sandy places. Ray.

2. Pulpous; plump: with regard to fruits.

Those fruits that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water. Bacon.

FLETCHER. n. f. [from fleche, an arrow, French.] A manufacturer of bows and arrows.

It is commended by our fletchers for bows, next unto yew. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLET. The participle passive of To fleet. Skimmed; deprived of the cream.

They drink flet milk, which they just warm. Mortimer

FLEW. The preterit of fly, not of flee.

The people flew upon the spoil. 1 Samuel.

O'er the world of waters Hermes flew,
'Till now the distant island rose in view. Pope.

FLEW. n. f. The large chaps of a deep-mouthed hound. Haumer.

FLE'WED. adj. [from flew.] Chapped; mouthed.

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, so fanded, and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew.
Shakspeare.

FLEXA'NIMOUS. adj. [flexanimus, Latin.] Having power to change the disposition of the mind.

That flexanimous and golden-tongued orator. Howel.

FLEXIBILITY. n. f. [flexibilité, French; from flexible.]

1. The quality of admitting to be bent; pliancy.

Do not the rays which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different inflexions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours. Newton's Opticks.

Corpuscles of the same set agree in every thing; but those that are of diverse kinds differ in specific gravity, in hardness, and in flexibility, as in bigness and figure. Woodward.

2. Easiness to be persuaded; ductility of mind; compliance; facility.

Resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meekness than by self-love. Hammond.

FLEXIBLE. adj. [flexibilis, Latin; flexible, French.]

1. Possible to be bent; not brittle; easy to be bent; pliant; not stiff.

When splitting winds

Make flexible the knees of knotted oaks. Shaksp.

Take a stock gilly-flower, tie it upon a stick, put them both into a glass full of quicksilver, so that the flower be covered: after four or five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was. Bacon.

2. Not rigid; not inexorable; complying; obsequious.

Phocyon was a man of great severity, and no ways flexible to the will of the people. Bacon.

3. Ductile; manageable.

Under whose care soever a child is put to be taught, during the tender and flexible years of his life, it should be one who thinks Latin and language the least part of education. Locke.

4. That may be accommodated to various forms and purposes.

This was a principle more flexible to their purpose. Rogers.

FLEXIBLENESS. n. f. [from flexible.]

1. Possibility to be bent; not brittleness; easiness to be bent; not stiffness; pliancy; pliancy.

I will rather chuse to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibleness shall be forced to bend. King Charles.

Keep those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would sag or curl. Boyle.

2. Facility; obsequiousness; compliance.

3. Ductility; manageableness.

The flexibleness of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable. Locke.

FLEXILE. adj. [flexilis, Latin.] Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.

Every flexile wave

Obeys the blast, th' aerial tumult swells. Thomson.

FLEXION. n. f. [flexio, Latin.]

1. The act of bending.

2. A double; a bending; part bent; joint.

Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. A turn toward any part or quarter.

Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.

Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Arbutnot.

FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Latin.]

1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.

In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow cranies, and the restrained flexuosus rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Digby.

2. Bending; not straight; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we did not feel; and the flexuosus burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.

FLEXURE. n. f. [flexura, Latin.]

1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.

Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.

2. The act of bending.

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakspeare.

3. The part bent; the joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins, And where the flexure of his navel joins. Sandys.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe. Not used.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will give place to flexure and low bends? Shaksp.

TO FLICKER. v. a. [fligheren, Dutch; pliecenian, Saxon.] To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

The wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phœbus' front. Shakspeare.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flick'ring on her nest made short essays to sing. Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

FLIER. n. f. [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

The gates are open, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest: as in a jack.

The flier tho't had leaden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't. Swift.

FLIGHT. n. f. [from To fly.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the fight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denh.

He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

As eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,
Pursu'd her flight; her flight increas'd his fire.
Pope.

2. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from his lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryden.

Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite.
Dryden.

3. Removed from place to place by means of wings.

Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
The fowls shall take their flight away together.
2 Esdras.

Fowls, by winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands.
Dryden's Æneid.

4. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakspeare.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon's New Atlantis.

I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup t' attend. Milton.

5. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.

6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scots the flew. Chevy Chase.

Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space pass'd by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; folly of the soul.

Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He shew'd all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope.

Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interests of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.

It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to decide these things.
Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way. Shakspeare.

FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]

1. Fleeting; swift.

Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakspeare.

2. Wild; full of imagination.

FLIMSY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope.

To FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other: nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South.

A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.

Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies to fail.

If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shakspeare.

FLINCHER. n. s. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.

To FLING. v. a. preter. flung; part.
flung or flong. [from fligo, Lat. Skinner:
according to others from flying; so to fling is to set flying.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.

The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as she flings,
Of kings make peasants, and of peasants kings.
Dryden.

2. To dart; to cast with violence.

How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung.
Denham.

3. To scatter.

Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings, Colours that change when'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. To drive by violence.

A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet.

5. To move forcibly.

The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison's Spectator.

6. To cast: in an ill sense.

I know thy gen'rous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire. Addison's Cato.

7. To force into another condition, probably into a worse.

Squalid fortune, into baseness flong,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments.
Spenser.

8. To FLING away. To eject; to dismiss.

Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakspeare.

9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward.

10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chace;
to defeat of a prey.

These men are too well acquainted with the chace to be flung off by any false steps or doubles.
Addison's Spectator.

To FLING. v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.

The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense. Hudibras.

Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.

Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakspeare.

FLING. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A throw; a cast.

2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.

No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.

I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to shew their vices odious. Swift.

FLINGER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. He who throws.

2. He who jeers.

FLINT. n. s. [flint, Saxon.]

1. A semipellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish gray, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.

Searching the window for a flint, I found This paper. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;

A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleaveland.

There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun.
South's Sermons.

Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by.
Dryden.

I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food.
Prior.

2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.

Your tears, a heart of flint Might tender make. Spenser.

Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault.
Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

FLINTY. adj. [from flint.]

1. Made of flint; strong.

Tyrant custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shakspeare.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back.
Dryden.

2. Full of stones.

The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps is no good husbandry.
Bacon's Natural History.

3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; in-exorable.

Gratitude,
Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shakspeare.

FLIPP. n. s. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.

The tarpawlin and swabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken sunburnt whore, over a can of flip. Dennis.

FLIPPANT. adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip flap.]

1. Nimble; moveable. It is used only of the act of speech.

An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices which render it so wonderfully voluble or flipant. Addison.

2. Pert; petulant; waggish.
Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.
FLIPPANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.]
In a flowing prating way.
To FLIRT. v. a. [Skinner thinks it formed from the sound.]
1. To throw any thing with a quick elastick motion.
Dick the scavenger
Flirts from his cart the mud in Walpole's face. Swift.
  2. To move with quickness.

Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world. Addison.
- FLIRTATION. n. f. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.
A muslin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.
- To FLIT. v. n. [from To fleet; or from flitter, Danish, to remove.]
1. To fly away.
Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser.
  2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term.
His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls do die of men that live amiss. Fairy Queen.
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to return. Fairy Queen.
It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other. Hooker.
  3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.
He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryd.
Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.
  4. To be flux or unstable.
Himself uphigh he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found Her flitting parts, and element unbound. Fairy Queen.
He stopt at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryd.
- FLIT. adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble; quick. Not in use.
And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight,
In poison and in blood, of malice and despatch. Fairy Queen.

- FLITCH. n. f. [pliece, Sax. flycke, Dan. fleske, floche, French, Skinner.] The side of a hog salted and cured.
But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryden's Juvenal.
While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.
He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Addison.

What divine monsters, O ye gods, were these
That float in air, and fly upon the seas! Dryd.
Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind. Pope.
  3. To pass with a light irregular course: perhaps mistaken for fleet or flet.
Floating visions make not deep impressions enough to leave in the mind clear, distinct, lasting ideas. Locke.
- To FLOAT. v. a. To cover with water.
Proud Paestolus floats the fruitful lands,
And leaves a rich manure of golden sands. Dryden's Aeneid.
Venice looks, at a distance, like a great town half *float*ed by a deluge. Addison on Italy.
Now smoaks with show'rs the misty mountain-ground,
And *float*ed fields lie undistinguish'd round. Pope's Statius.
The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.
- FLOAT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of flowing; the flux; the contrary to the ebb. A sense now out of use.
Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float. Hooker.
There is some disposition of bodies to rotation, particularly from east to west; of which kind we

- conceive the main float and reflow of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. Any body so contrived or formed as to swim upon the water.
They took it for a ship, and as it came nearer, for a boat; but it proved a float of weeds and rushes. L'Estrange.
A passage for the weary people make;
With floats the standing water strow,
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

- FLOCK. n. f. [flocc, Saxon.]
1. A company; usually a company of birds or beasts.
She that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.
  2. A company of sheep, distinguished from herds, which are of oxen.
The cattle in the fields, and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary; these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.
France has a sheep by her, to shew that the riches of the country consisted chiefly in flocks and pasturage. Addison.
  3. A body of men.
The heathen that had fled out of Judea came to Nicanor by flocks. 2 Maccabees.
  4. [from floccus.] A lock of wool.
A house well-furnish'd shall be thine to keep;
And, for a flock bed, I can sheer my sheep. Dryden.
- To FLOCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather in crowds or large numbers.

FLO'UNDER. n. f. [flynder, Danish; fluke, Scottish.] The name of a small flat fish.

Like the flounder, out of the frying-pan into the fire.
Camden.

Flounders will both thrive and breed in any pond.
Mortimer.

To FLO'UNDER. v. n. [from flounce.] To struggle with violent and irregular motions: as a horse in the mire.

Down goes at once the horseman and the horse;

That courser stumbles on the fallen steed,
And floundring throws the rider o'er his head.
Dryden.

The more inform'd, the less he understood,
And deeper sunk by flound'ring in the mud.
Dryden.

He plung'd for sense, but found no bottom there;

Then writ and flounder'd on in mere despair.
Pope.

To FLOURISH. v. n. [floreo, floresco, Latin.]

1. To be in vigour; not to fade.

The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree.
Psalms.

Where'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise,
And all things flourish where you turn your eyes.
Pope.

2. To be in a prosperous state.

If I could find example
Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: but since Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't.
Shakspeare.

Harry, that prophesied thou should'st be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep; live thou and flourish.
Shakspeare.

He was the patron of my manhood, when I flourished in the opinion of the world, though with small advantage to my fortune. Dryden.

Bad men as frequently prosper and flourish,
and that by the means of their wickedness.
Nelson.

3. To use florid language; to speak with ambitious copiousness and elegance.

Whilst Cicero acts the part of a rhetorician, he dilates and flourishes, and gives example instead of rule. Baker.

They dilate sometimes, and flourish long upon little incidents, and they skip over and but lightly touch the drier part of their theme.
Watts' Logick.

4. To describe various figures by intersecting lines; to play in wanton and irregular motions.

Impetuous spread
The stream, and smoking, flourish'd o'er his head. Pope.

5. To boast; to brag.

6. [In musick.] To play some prelude without any settled rule.

To FLOURISH. v. a.

1. To adorn with vegetable beauty.

With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,
A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Fenton.

2. To adorn with figures of needlework.

3. To work with a needle into figures.
All that I shall say will be but like bottoms of thread close wound up, which, with a good needle, perhaps may be flourish'd into large works. Bacon's War with Spain.

4. To move any thing in quick circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph.

And all the powers of hell in full applause Flourish'd their snakes, and toss'd their flaming brands. Crashaw.

Against the post their wicker shields they crush,
Flourish the sword, and at the plastron push.
Dryden.

5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusive.

The labours of Hercules, though flourish'd with much fabulous matter; yet notably set forth, the consent of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters, and tyrants. Bacon.

As they are likely to over-flourish their own case, so their flattery is hardest to be discovered.
Collier.

6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Shakspeare.

FLOURISH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Bravery; beauty; ambitious splendour.

I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was. Shakspeare.

The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Crashaw.

2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature. Brown.

The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out. More.

Villanies have not the same countenance,
when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetoric interposed between the sight and the object. L'Estrange.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them.
South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;

He lards with flourish his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be prais'd and hang? Dryden.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.

FLOURISHER. n. s. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flow'r;
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r. Chapman.

To FLOUT. v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flourwe, Frisick.] To mock; to insult;
to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency. Shakspeare.
The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;
Certainly he flouted us downright. Shakspeare.
She rail'd at her, that she should be so im-modest to write to one she knew would flout her.

Shakspeare.
Phillida flouts me. Walton's Angler.

To FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery;
to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument? Shakspeare.

With talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude;
When you perty raise your snout,
Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

FLOUT. n. s. [from the verb.] A mock;
an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras.
Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without.

Dryden.
How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup? Calamy's Sermons.

FLOUTER. n. s. [from flout.] One who jeers.

To FLOW. v. n. [floan, Saxon.]

1. To run or spread as water.

The god am I, whose yellow water flows Around these fields, and fattens as it goes.
Dryden's Aeneid.

Fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.
Dryden.

Endless tears flow down in streams. Swift.

2. To run: opposed to standing waters.

With oser floats the standing water flow;
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

3. To rise; not to ebb.

This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between.
Shakspeare.

4. To melt.

Oh that thou wouldst rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence.
Isaiah.

5. To proceed; to issue.

I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from't,
I shall do good. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse. South.

6. To glide smoothly without asperity:
as, a flowing period.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence. Hakewill on Provvid.

7. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.

Virgil is sweet and flowing in his hexameters.
Dryden.

Did sweeter sounds adorn thy flowing tongue
Than ever man pronounc'd, or angels sung.
Prior.

8. To abound; to be crowded.

The dry streets flow'd with men. Chapman.

9. To be copious; to be full.

Then shall our names,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
Shakspeare's Henry v.

There every eye with stumb'rous chains she bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblet to the ground.
Pope's Odyssey.

10. To hang loose and waving.

He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers. Spectator.

To FLOW. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.

Watering hops is scarce practicable, unless you have a stream at hand to flow the ground.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

Flow. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow,
We as arts elements shall understand. Dryden.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLOWER. n. s. [fleur, French; flos, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex, and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single stile; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, buglos; or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do; but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike, but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the arilostochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcisus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galleate, cucullate, and galeolate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called stameneous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel.

Miller.

Good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shaksp. Macbeth.

With flow'r inwoven tresses torn
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beauteous flowers why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead. Cowley.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance,
we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips,
and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill.

Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flow'r of age you perish for a song. Pope.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want.
Spenser on Ireland.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakspere.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd, Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;

Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour.
Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.

Thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shaksp.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakspere.

FLO'WER de Luce. n. f. A bulbous iris.

Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant;
and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de lues in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shaksp.
The iris is the flower de luce. Peacham.

To FLO'WER. v. n. [fleurir, French; or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly sort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport.
Fairy Queen.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd.
Fairy Queen.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,
Op'ning their various colours. Milton.
Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load.
Dryden's Georg.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shaksp.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little: whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering.
Bacon's Natural History.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flowered off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of.
Milton.

To FLO'WER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLO'WERAGE. n. f. [from flower.] Store of flowers.

DiD.

FLO'WERET. n. f. [fleurit, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would aguish
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight.
Fairy Queen.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,

Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail.
Shakspere.

So to the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets
crown'd,

And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unfoli'd are the leaves. Dryd.

FLO'WERGARDEN. n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLO'WERINESS. n. f. [from flowery.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness of speech.

FLO'WERINGBUSH. n. f. A plant.

FLO'WERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the syrens three,
Amidst the flow'ry kirtled Naiades. Milton.
Day's harbinger

Comes dancing from the east, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw. Pope.

To her the shadow grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains no delight could yield. Pope.

FLO'WINGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance.

FLOWK. n. f. [flake, Scottish.] A flounder; the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice, follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew.

FLO'WKWORT. n. f. The name of a plant.

FLOWN. The participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CTUANT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]

Wavering; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion? L'Estrange.

To FLU'CTUATE. v. n. [fluere, Latin.]

1. To roll to and again, as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hov'ring there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
New parts puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has hitherto been of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUATION, n. f. [fluctuatio, Latin; fluctuation, French; from fluctuate.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates. Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

FLUE, n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flew of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUELLIN, n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLUENCY, n. f. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire, The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickel.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease, Behold him tost on seas. Sandys' Paraph. on Job.

God riches and renown to men imparts, Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts Cannot so great a fluency receive, But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLUENT, adj. [fluens, Latin.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next. Ray.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that 's within me, And with most fluent utterance. Denham.

FLUENT, n. f. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that fed'ious strive To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress, Ev'n in the sight of death. Philips.

FLUENTLY, adv. [from fluent.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

FLUID, adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud, Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milton.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

FLUID, n. f.

1. Any thing not solid.

2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

FLUIDITY, n. f. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.]

The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much by diminish- the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arbuthnot.

FLUIDNESS, n. f. [from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLUMMERY, n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

FLUNG, The participle and preterit of fling. Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison on Italy.

FLUOR, n. f. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluor, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours. Newton's Opt.

2. Catamenia.

FLURRY, n. f.

Th' oars were silver, Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shakspeare.

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.
Dryden.

2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.

To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

To FLUTTER. v. n. [flotejan, Saxon; flotter, Fr.]

1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deuteronomy.

Think you've an angel by the wings!

One that gladly will be nigh,

To wait upon each morning-sigh;

To flutter in the balmy air

Of your well-perfumed pray'r. Craslow.

They fed, and, flutt'ring, by degrees withdrew. Dryden.

2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.

Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth-high. Grew.

No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,

That once so flutt'ring, and that once so writ.

Pope's Dunciad.

3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.

Ye spirits! to your charge repair;

The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.

They the tall mast above the vessel rear,

Or teach the flutt'ring sail to float in air. Pope.

4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.

The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and how long we fluttered upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surprised. Howell's Vocal Forest.

It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or discernment of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in sounds of doubtful signification. Locke.

Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flutt'ring dance!

Prior.

His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.

He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. South.

FLUXI'LITY. n. s. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.

Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversation of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below. Boyle.

FLUXION. n. s. [fluxio, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing.

2. The matter that flows.

The fluxion increased, and abscesses were raised.

Wifeman.

3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given. Harris.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.

To FLY. v. n. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. [pleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away, plean, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]

1. To move through the air with wings.

Ere the bat hath flown

His cloister'd flight. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heav'n. Genesis.

These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,

Help thee to pass the tedious time,

Which else would on thy hand remain;

Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.

The scouts with flying speed

Return, and through the city spread the news. Dryden.

Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

5. To move with rapidity.

As striplings whip the top for sport,

On the smooth pavement of an empty court,

The wooden engine flies and whirls about. Dryden.

6. To part with violence.

Glad to catch this good occasion,

Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff

And corn shall fly asunder. Shakspeare. Henry VIII.

He basset heads, to save his own, made fly;

And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Behold, a frothy substance rise;

Be cautious, of your bottle flies. Swift.

8. [plean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. In this sense the verb is properly to flee, whence fled is formed; but the following examples show that they are confounded: they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense.

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.

Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech.

Abiather escaped and fled after David. 1 Sam.

What wonder if the kindly beams he fled,

Reviv'd the drooping arts again;

If science rais'd her head,

And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryden.

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,

And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;

From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
For sake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.

9. To FLY at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword

To his great master; who, thereat enrag'd,

Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead. Shakspeare.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and fly at him. Bacon's Natural History.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South's Sermons.

This is an age that flies at all learning, and enquires especially into faults. South.

10. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

11. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:

—But how, if nature fly in my face first?

—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden.

12. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak to me? They're sick, they're weary,

They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;

The images of revolt and flying off. Shakspeare.

The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horse.
Addison's Cato.

13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks.

Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friendship.

14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dry.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.

16. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Gran.

17. To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.

To FLY. v. a.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love
pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shakspeare.

O Jove, I think

Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakspeare.

If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need
it. Bacon's Essays.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle. Milton.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares
oppress'd,
And his tofs'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Juvenal.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryd.

3. To quit by flight.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden's Æn.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.

5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterit of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape: flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY. n. f. [pleoge, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.

To prevent the fly, some purpose to sow ashes

He goes pressing forward, 'till he was fobbed again with another story. L'Estrange.

2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.

You must not think

To fob off your disgraces with a tale. Shakspeare.

For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;

But these will not be fobb'd off so,
They must have wealth and power too. Hudib.

By a Ravenna vintner once betray'd,
So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;

But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,
The rascal fobb'd me off with only wine. Addif.

Being a great lover of country-sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fobb'd off with a garter. Addif.

Is not their climate foggy, raw and dull?

Shakspeare's Henry v.

As cleere Phœbus, when some foggy cloud His brightnesse from the world a while doth shrowd, Doth by degrees beginne to shew his light.

Brown.

Let not air be subject to any foggy noisomeness, from fens or marshes near adjoining.

Wotton's Architecture.

About Michaelmas, the weather fair, and by no means foggy, retire your rarest plants. Evelyn.

2. Cloudy in understanding; dull.

FOH. interjeç. [from fah, Saxon, an enemy.] An interjection of abhorrence: as if one should at sight of any thing hated cry out a foe!

Not to affect many proposed matches Of her own clime, complexion and degree, Whereto we see in all things nature tends, Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank, Foul disproportions, thoughts unnatural. Shakspeare.

FOIBLE. n. f. [French.] A weak side; a blind side; a failing.

He knew the foibles of human nature. Friend.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foible, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument. Watts.

To FOIL. v. a. [affoler, to wound, old French.]

1. To put to the worst; to defeat; though without a complete victory.

Amazement seiz'd

The rebel thrones; but greater rage to see Thus foil'd their mightiest. Milton.

Leader of those armies bright, Which but th' omnipotent none could have foil'd.

Milton.

Yet these subject not: I to thee disclose What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd: Who meet with various objects, from the sense Various representing: yet still free, Approve the best, and follow what I approve.

Milton.

Strange, that your fingers should the pencil foil, Without the help of colours or of oil! Waller.

He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature. Wifeman's Surgery.

In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foiled, that they now despair of ever getting the day. Calamy's Sermons.

Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd; And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd. Dryden.

But I, the consort of the thunderer, Have wag'd a long and unsuccessful war; With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd, And by a mortal man at length am foil'd. Dryden.

2. [fouiller, French.] To blunt; to dull.

When light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid foil, with wanton dulness, My speculative and offic'd instruments. Shakspeare.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Whilst I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chase. Addison.

FOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.

We of thy cunning had no diffidence; One sudden foil shall never breed distrust. Shakspeare.

Whoever overthroweth his mate in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is call'd a foil.

Carew.

So after many a foil the tempter proud, Renewing fresh assaults, admitts his pride, Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall. Milt.

When age shall level me to impotence, And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil.

Southern.

Death never won a stake with greater toil, Nor e'er was fate so near a foil. Dryden.

2. [feuille, French.] Leaf gilding.

A stately palace, built of squared brick, Which cunningly was without mortar laid, Whole walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,

And golden foil all over them display'd. Fairy Q.

Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil, Nor in the glittering foil

Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies.

Milton.

5. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.

As she a black silk cap on him begun To set for foil of his milk-white to serve. Sidney.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground, My reformation glittering o'er my fault, Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes, Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakspeare.

The sullen passage of thy weary steps Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set

The precious jewel of thy home. Shakspeare.

'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foil closely to itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foil is a mixture of mastich and burnt ivory. Grew's Museum.

Hector has a foil to set him off: we oppose the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector. Broome on the Odyssey.

4. [from fouiller, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.

He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target. Shakspeare.

FO'ILER. n. f. [from foil.] One who has gained advantage over another.

To FOIN. v. n. [foindre, Fr. Skinner.]

To push in fencing.

He hew'd, and lash'd, and foin'd, and thunder'd blows,

A every way did seek into his life; Ne plate, ne mail, could ward so mighty throws,

But yielded passage to his cruel knife. Fairy Q.

He cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foin like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Then both, no moment lost, at once advance Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance:
They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore

Their corslets, and the thinnest parts explore.
Dryden.

FOIN. n. f. [from the verb.] A thrust;
a push.

FOININGLY. adv. [from foin.] In a pushing manner.

FOISON. n. f. [foison, Sax.] Plenty;
abundance. Out of use.

Pay justly thy tithes, whatsoever thou be,
That God may in blessing send foison to thee.
Tusser.

Be wilful to kill, and unskilful to store,
And look for no foison, I tell thee before. Tusser.
Nature should bring forth,

Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people. Shakspeare's Temp.
As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time

That from the feedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison; so her plenteous womb Expresseth his full tilth and husbandry. Shaksp.

FOIST. v. a. [fausser, French.] To infect by forgery.

Left negligence or partiality might admit or foist in abuses and corruption, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings. Carew.

Forge law, and foist into some by place
Of some old rotten roll. Dryden's Don. Sebast.

FOISTINESS. n. f. [from foistly.] Fust-iness; mouldiness.

Dress mustard, and lay it in cellar up sweet,

Left foistiness make it for table unmeet. Tusser.

FOISTY. adj. [See FUSTY.] Mouldy; fusty.

FOLD. n. f. [falæb, falð, Saxon.]

1. The ground in which sheep are confined.

His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field
Part arable and tilth; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part, sheepwalks and folds. Milton.

In thy book record their groans,
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold Slain. Milton.

2. The place where sheep are housed.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold;
And Philomel becometh dumb,
And all complain of cares to come. Raleigh.

3. The flock of sheep.

And this you see I scarcely drag along,
Who yearning on the rocks has left her young,
The hope and promise of my failing fold. Dryd.

4. A limit; a boundary.

Secure from meeting, they're distinctly roll'd;
Nor leave their seats, and pass the dreadful fold.
Grech.

5. [from pild, Saxon.] A double; a complication; an involution; one part added to another; one part doubled upon another.

She in this trice of time
Commits a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour! Shakspeare.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrowded in a number of folds of linen, besmeared with gums. Bacon's Nat. History.

Not with indented wave, the serpent then Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.

Let the draperies be nobly spread upon the body, and let the folds be large: the parts should be often traversed by the flowing of the folds.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

With fear and wonder seiz'd, the crowd be-holds

The gloves of death, with seven distinguish'd folds
Of tough bull hides. Dryden's Virgil.

The inward coat of a lion's stomach has stronger folds than a human, but in other things not much different. Arbutnot.

6. From the foregoing signification is derived the use of fold in composition.
Fold signifies the same quantity added:
as two fold, twice the quantity; twenty fold, twenty times repeated.

But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit; some an hundred fold, some sixty fold, some thirty fold. Matthew.

At last appear
Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice three fold the gates: three folds were brafs,

Three iron, three of adamant rock. Milton.

Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
O'er all th' Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple tyrant; that from these may grow
A hundred fold. Milton.

TO FOLD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut sheep in the fold.

The star that bids the shepherd fold,
Now the top of heav'n doth hold. Milton.

We see that the folding of sheep helps ground,
as well by their warmth as by their compost.
Bacon's Natural History.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store,
With wine to drive away the cold,
And untought dainties of the poor. Dryden.

2. To enclose; to include; to shut.

We will descend and fold him in our arms.
Shakspeare's Richard II.

Witness my son, now in the shade of death,
Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up. Shakspeare.
The fires i' th' lowest hell fold in the people!
Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

3. [palban, Saxon.] To double; to complicate.

As a vesture shalt thou fold them up. Heb.
Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep. Proverbs.

They be folden together as thorns. Nahum.
I have seen her rise from her bed, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon't, read it, seal it, and again return to bed. Shaksp.

Conscious of its own impotence, it folds its arms in despair, and sits cursing in a corner.
Collier of Envy.

Both furl their sails, and strip them for the fight;
Their folded sheets dismiss the useless air. Dryd.

TO FOLD. v. n. To close over another of the same kind; to join with another of the same kind.

The two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.
1 Kings.

FOLIA'CEOUS. adj. [foliaceus, from folium, Latin.] Consisting of laminæ or leaves.

A piece of another, consisting of an outer crust, of a ruddy talky spar, and a blue talky foliaceus
spar. Woodward on Fossils.

FO'LIAGE. n. f. [folium, Latin; feuillage, French.] Leaves; tufts of leaves; the apparel of leaves to a plant.

The great columns are finely engraven with fruits and foliage, that run twisting about them from the very top to the bottom. Addison.

When swelling buds their od'rous foliage shed,
And gently harden into fruit, the wise
Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow Redundant. Philips.

TO FO'LIATE. v. a. [foliatus, folium,
Latin.] To beat into laminæ or leaves.

Gold foliated, or any metal foliated, cleaveth.
Bacon.

If gold be foliated, and held between your eyes and the light, the light looks of a greenish blue. Newton's Opticks.

FOLIA'TION. n. f. [foliatio, folium, Lat.]

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.

2. Foliation is one of the parts of a flower, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these, being tender and pulpos, and coming forth in the spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FO'LIATURE. n. f. [from folium, Latin.]
The state of being hammered into leaves.
Diä.

FO'LIO. n. f. [in folio, Latin.] A large book of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

Plumbinus and Plumeo made less progress in knowledge, though they had read over more folios. Watts on the Mind.

FO'LIOMORT. adj. [folium mortuum, Lat.]
A dark yellow; the colour of a leaf faded: vulgarly called philomot.

A flinty pebble was of a dark-green colour,
and the exterior cortex of a foliomort colour.
Woodward on Fossils.

FOLK. n. f. [folc, Saxon; volk, Dutch: it is properly a noun collective, and has no plural but by modern corruption.]

1. People, in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolor dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortune. Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy so ever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules

Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hudibras.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Psalms.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before. Shakspeare.

Anger is a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks. Bacon.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the tree has seen,
And goes with folks to shew the fight. Swift.

He walk'd and wore a threadbare cloak;
He din'd and supp'd at charge of other folk.
Swift.

FO'LMOTE. n. f. [from folk and mote.]

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folkmotes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk
Spenser on Ireland.

FO'LLICLE. n. f. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.
Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts.
Brown.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying seed-vessels, capsula feminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.

To FOLLOW. v. a. [folgian, Saxon; wolgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakspeare.

Him and all his train

Follow'd in bright procession, to behold Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton.

What could I do,

But follow strait, invisibly thus led? Milton.

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.

Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place To seek Sebastian, through a track of death I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryd.

3. To accompany; not to forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain God is as here, and will be found alike Present, and of his presence many a sign Still following thee, still compassing thee round With goodness and paternal love, his face Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

Up he rode,

Follow'd with acclamation and the sound Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd Angelic harmonies. Milton.

4. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle. 1 Samuel.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway, Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after, as a teacher.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid, And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden's Æneid.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

6. To succeed in order of time.

Such follow him as shall be register'd, Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll. Milton.

Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year. Pope.

7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear What yet they know must follow, to endure Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain. Milton.

8. To imitate; to copy as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancients and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke.

9. To obey; to observe, as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no christians. Tillotson.

Most men admire

Virtue, who follow not her lore. Par. Regain'd.

Fair virtue should I follow thee,

I should be naked and alone,

For thou art not in company,

And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.

10. To pursue as an object of desire.

Follow peace with all men. Hebrews.

Follow not that which is evil. John.

11. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

12. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclus.

To FOLLOW. v. n.

1. To come after another.

The famine shall follow close after you. Jer.

Welcome all that lead or follow

To the oracle of Apollo. Ben Jonson.

2. To attend servilely.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion, That in the nature of their lords rebels: As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shakspeare's King Lear.

3. To be posterious in time.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause. If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hosea.

FOLLOWER. n. s. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise, Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermons.

3. An attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can'st thou tell that? —With Poins, and other his continual followers. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost, To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden's Æneid.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copier.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Corinthians.

The true profession of christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Sprat's Sermons.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their king and their master. Nelson.

The studious head or gen'rous mind, Follower of God, or friend of human kind, Poet or patriot, rose but to restore The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope.

7. One of the same faction or party.

FOLLY. n. s. [folie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly childhood's guide, This is childhood at her side. Hawthornth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think'st thou, that duty should have dread to speak, When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakspeare.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see The pretty follies that themselves commit; For if they could, Cupid himself would blush To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakspeare.

Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly, Lies all neglected, all forgot. Prior.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease, Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope.

To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomenter, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives, Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbuthnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Wotton.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires, Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTATION. n. s. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation calleth forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultis, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FOMENTER. n. s. [from foment.] One that foment; an encourager; a supporter.

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politick at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. Howel.

FON. n. s. [Scott. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon, That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser.

FOND. adj. [fon, Scottish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.

That the Grecians or gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond school-master. Ascham.

Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakspeare's Coriol.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakspeare.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shaksf.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. Davies.

Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milton.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite. Milton.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy wish. Waller.

But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinites. Dryden.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond shekels of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shaksf. Meas. for Meas.

3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

I'm a foolish fond wife. Addison.

Like Venus I'll shine,
Be fond and be fine. Addison.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted: with of.

Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden.

I, fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.

Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts' on the Mind.

To FOND. } v. a. [from the adjective.]

To Fo'NDLE. } To treat with great indulgence; to caress; to coddle.

How'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond it as the forward child of love. Dryden.

When midst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins. Dryden's Æneid.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Swift.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love with; to dote on.

How will this sadge? My master loves her dearly;

Bentley's Sermons.

3. Example.

FOOTSTOOL. n. f. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security.

Shakspeare.

They whose sacred office 'tis to bring Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men to the footstool of the Deity.

Denham.

Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heaven his throne.

Roscommon.

By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool.

Stillingfleet.

FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an impertinent.

A whole tribe of fops,

Got 'tween asleep and wake.

Shakspeare.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,

Among his numerous absurdities,

Stumbles upon some tolerable line,

I fret to see them in such company.

Roscommon.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat.

L'Estrange.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,

You hardly see the current flow;

When a small breeze obstructs the course,

It whirls about for want of force,

And in its narrow circle gathers

Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:

The current of a female mind

Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;

Thus whirling round, together draws

Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws.

Swift.

FOPDOODLE. n. f. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,

And handled you like a fopdoodle.

Hudibras.

FOPPERY. n. f. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter

My sober house. Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies.

Shakspeare.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity.

Shakspeare's K. Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in.

Stillingfleet.

But though we fetch from Italy and France

Our fopperies of tune and modes of dance,

Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense.

Granville.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects.

Swift.

FOPPISH. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;

For wise men are grown foppish,

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish.

Shakspeare.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have;

The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;

The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;

The Jew'd are airy, and the sly discreet.

Garth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women.

Arbutnot.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt.

Laro.

FOPPISHLY. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.

FOPPISHNESS. n. f. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.

FOPPLING. n. f. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

Thy works in Chloe's toilet gain a part,

And, with his taylor, share the foppling's heart.

Tickel.

FOR. prep. [for, Saxon; voor, Dutch.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his Son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant.

Hooker.

Edward and Richard,

With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,

Are at our backs. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Speak, good Cominius;

Leave nothing out for length.

Shakspeare.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels.

Raleigh's History.

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment.

Bacon.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention.

Bacon's War with Spain.

The governor fallying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them.

Knolles' Hist.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victuals.

Knolles.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,

This cannot take her:

FOR

FOR

If of herself she will not love,

Nothing can make her.

Suckling.

Care not for frowns or smiles.

Denham.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wicked for hoping.

Hammond's Pract. Catech.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him.

Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low, that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them.

Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,

And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid.

Dryden.

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief,
Roar'd out for anguish and indulg'd his grief.

Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne.

Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd

For what befalls at home, or what abroad.

Dryd.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;

For pity, aggravate my crime no more.

Dryden.

Matrons of renown,

When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,

Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,

For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die.

Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers.

Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little better for any thing else.

Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests.

Addison.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,

And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise.

Prior.

Which best or worst you could not think;

And die you must for want of drink.

Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt.

Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us.

Swift.

Your sermons will be less valuable, for want of time.

Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

Rather our state's defective for requital,

Than we to stretch it out.

Shaksp. Coriolanus.

A paltry ring

That she did give me, whose poesy was,

For all the world, like cutler's poetry

Upon a knife; love me and leave me not.

Shaksp.

For all the world,

As thou art at this hour, was Richard then.

Shak.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters.

Bacon's Essays.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politick.

Bacon's Essays.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects.

Bacon's Essays.

For me, if there be such a thing as I.

Waller.

He saith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it.

Stillingfleet.

Our laws were for their matter foreign.

Hales.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command.

Temple.

For me, no other happiness I own,

Than to have born no issue to the throne.

Dryd.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,

I to the port of death securely tend.

Dryden's Æn.

After death, we sprights have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures.

Dryden.

Such little wasps, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong.

Tate's Juvenal.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them.

Pope.

Lo, some are vellom, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood.

Pope.

3. In this sense it has often as before it.

As for Maramaldus the general, they had no just cause to dislike him, being an old captain of great experience.

Knolles.

4. In the character of.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth?

Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:

But let her go, for an ungrateful woman.

A. Philips.

Say, is it fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter,

I, in this field, should die for a deserter?

Gay.

5. With resemblance of.

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd.

Milton.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,

And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight:
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.

Dryden.

6. Considered as; in the place of.

Our present lot appears

For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,

If we procure not to ourselves more woe.

Milton.

The counsel-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited.

Clarendon.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.

An ant is a wise creature for itself: but it is a shrewd thing in a orchard.

Bacon.

He refused not to die for those that killed him,
and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it.

Boyle.

Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devour'd.

Dryden.

Read all the prefaces of Dryden,

For those our criticks much confide in;

Though meely writ at first for filling,

To raise the volume's price a shilling.

Swift.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to.

It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for men's health to be temperate.

Tillotson.

It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it.

Addison's Spectator.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.

We sailed from Peru for China and Japan.

Bacon.

As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich haven.

Hayward.

We sailed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind.

Addison.

10. In comparative respect.

For tusks with Indian elephants he strove,

And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove.

Dryden.

11. With appropriation to.

Shadow will serve for summer: prick him;
for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book.

Shakspeare.

12. After O an expression of desire.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend

The brightest heaven of invention!

Shakspeare.

13. In account of; in solution of.

Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

14. Inducing to as a motive.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice.

Tillotson.

15. In expectation of.

He must be back again by one and twenty,
to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion, nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with.

Locke.

16. Noting power or possibility.

For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors.

Taylor.

17. Noting dependence.

The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by.

Boyle.

18. In prevention of; for fear of.

Corn being laid down, any way ye allow,
Should wither as needeth for burning in mow.

Tusser.

And, for the time shall not seem tedious,

I'll tell thee what befel me on a day,

In this self place.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.

There must be no alleys with hedges at the hither end, for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green: nor at the farther end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath.

Bacon's Essays.

She wrapped him close for catching cold.

Lovelace.

19. In remedy of.

Sometimes hot, sometimes cold things are good for the toothach.

Garretson.

20. In exchange of.

He made considerable progress in the study of the law, before he quitted that profession for this of poetry.

Dryden.

21. In the place of; instead of.

To make him copious is to alter his character;
and to translate him line for line is impossible.

Dryden.

We take a falling meteor for a star.

Cowley.

22. In supply of; to serve in the place of.

Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective.

Dryden.

23. Through a certain duration.

Some please for once, some will for ever please.

Roscom.

Those who sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it.

Locke.

The administration of this bank is for life,
and partly in the hands of the chief citizens.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing
Successive conquests, and a glorious king;
And bring him laurels whatso'er they cost.

Prior.

The youth transported, asks without delay

To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day.

Garth's Ovid.

24. In search of; in quest of.

Philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men.

Tillotson.

25. According to.

Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony.

Boyle.

26. Noting a state of fitness or readiness.

Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Shakspeare.

If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke.

27. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.

How quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,

Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains
with care,

Their bones with industry: for this engross'd

The canker'd heaps of itrong atchieved gold:

For this they have been thoughtful to invest

Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks.

Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,

In words worth dying for, he celebrate.

Cowley.

For he writes not for money, nor for praise,

Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays.

Denham.

There we shall see, a fight worthy dying for,
that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us.

Boyle.

He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company.

Tillotson.

Even death's become to me no dreadful name;

In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,

I saw him, and contemn'd him first for you.

For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,

And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart.

Dryden's Virgil.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;

But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain.

Dryden.

Let them who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their swords like mine for noble ends.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

28. Of tendency to; toward.

The kettle to the top was hoist;

But with its upside down, to show

Its inclination for below.

Swift.

29. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive.

Hooker, Preface.

It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one.

Dryden.

Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife.

Dryden.

He for the world was made, not us alone.

Cowley.

They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him.

Smalridge.

Aristotle is for poetical justice.

Dennis.

They are all for rank and foul feeding.

Felton.

30. Noting accommodation or adaptation.

Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,

Spies that I bear so well her tyranny,

That she thinks nothing else so fit for me.

Donne.

A few rules of logick are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement.

Locke.

It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God.

Tillotson.

His country has good havens, both for the Adriatic and Mediterranean.

Addison on Italy.

Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land.

Arbutnot on Coins.

Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use.

Felton.

31. With intention of.

And by that justice hast remov'd the cause

Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent

Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent.

Waller.

Here huntmen with delight may read

How to chuse dogs for scent or speed.

Waller.

God hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of.

Tillotson's Sermons.

For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are courses driv'n, who shed their masters blood.

Dryden.

Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation.

Locke.

The next question usually is, what is it for?

Locke.

Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector.

Broome.

32. Becoming; belonging to.

It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Shakspeare.

Th' offers he doth make,

Were not for him to give, nor them to take.

Daniel.

It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force.

Knolles.

Jests for Dutchmen and English boys.

Cowley.

Is it for you to ravish seas and land,

Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command!

Dryden.

His fire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities.

Dryden.

It is a reasonable account for any man to give,
why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do,
and perish with them.

Tillotson.

33. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth.

Hooker.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows,
the next minute supervene.

Decay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side.

South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us.

Swift.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system.

Bentley.

34. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,

The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill.

Spenser.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason.

Tillotson.

35. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,

They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood.

Dryden.

36. In recompence of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

Dryden's Persius.

First the wily wizard must be caught;

For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught.

Dryden's Virgil.

37. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall.

Shak.

As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy.

Bacon.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!

Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;

Too noble for revenge.

Dryden's Juvenal.

38. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the feasible appetite, were it not for the will.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God?

Tillotson.

39. In regard of; in preservation of.

I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

VOL. I.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shakspeare.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison's Spectator.

40. For all; notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing
I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize.

Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up.

Knolles' History.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no
more,

Did shew the footing found for all the flood.

Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgment.

Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home.

Stillingfleet.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will,
for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account.

Boyle on Colours.

She might have passed over my businesses;
but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence,
for all her pertness.

Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition.

South.

41. For to.

In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinite mood, to note the final cause. As I come,
for to see you, for I love to see you:
in the same sense with the French pour.
Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and,
for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous,
is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now

On this vile body for to wreak my wrong?

Fairy Queen.

A large posterity

Up to your happy palaces may mount,

Of blessed saints for to increase the count.

Spenser.

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain.

Bacon.

FOR. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not.

Shakspeare.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one winter more would hold.

Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:

For the first matter loves variety less.

Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God.

Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men.

Spenser on Ireland.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:

They are not ever jealous for a cause,

But jealous for they're jealous.

Shakspeare.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think

I will your serious and great business scant;

For she is with me.

Shakspeare's Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,

That heav'n on him above his charge had laid:

But, for his great Creator would the same,

His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame.

Fairfax.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance.

Bacon's Natural History.

3. FOR as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest over-quick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of.

Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. FOR why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him.

Knolles.

To FO'RAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance. Not in use.

Forage, and run

To meet displeasure farther from the doors,

And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh.

Shakspeare's King John.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,

Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,

Forage for prey.

Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn,
and the dam went abroad to forage for them.

L'Estrange.

Nor dare they stray

When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;

But near the city walls their wat'ring take,

Nor forage far, but short excursions make.

Dryden.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill

Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp

Forage in blood of French nobility.

Shakspeare.

To FO'RAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land.

Spenser on Ireland.

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army.

South.

FO'RAGE. n. f. [fourage, German and French; from foris, Latin.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a band select from forage drives

A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,

From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,

Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains

Their booty.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Provisions sought abroad.

Some o'er the public magazines preside,

And some are sent new forage to provide.

Dryden.

3. Provisions in general.

Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd.

Dryden's Fables.

FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will deaden it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Natural History.

To FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn. [forbænan, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation; as, forfever, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.
Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.

2. To pause; to delay.
I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong, I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakspeare.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbare to go forth. 1 Samuel.
At this he started, and forbare to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryd.

The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.

4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Proverbs.

To FORBEAR. v. a.

1. To decline; to avoid voluntarily.
Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakspeare.

So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.
With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph.

4. To withhold.
Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chronicles.

FORBEARANCE. n. f. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from to foul a wrong. Shakspeare.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermision of something.

3. Command of temper.

Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakspeare's King Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison's Freeholder.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. f. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.

The west as a father all goodness doth bring,
The east a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tusser.

To FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidden or forbid. [forbeodan, Saxon; verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean;
have I not forbid her my house? Shakspeare.

It is
The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shakspeare.
By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Sprat.

The chaste and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon's Natural History.

The plaster alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it, as well as forbid new humour. Bac.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the fight!
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete.

To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

To FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakspeare.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden? Milton's Parad. Lost.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shakspeare.

FORBIDDER. n. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDING. participial adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

FORCE. n. f. [force, French; fortis, Latin.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.

He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakspeare.

A ship, which hath struck sail, doth run
By force of that force which before it won. Donne.

2. Violence.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Shakspeare.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride
By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;
But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath in regard of us, great virtue, force, and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead. Hebrews.

Not long in force this charter stood;
Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.

O thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shakspeare.
The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Baron.

A greater force than that which here we find,
Ne'er prefs'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

To FORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Broome.

2. To overpower by strength.

O that fortune
Had brought me to the field where thou art sam'd

To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,
I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milton.

With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deuteronomy.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine,
Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin:
It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay,
That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To enforce; to urge.

Three blust'ring nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated, and discover'd land at last:
High on a mounting wave my head I bore,
Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore. Dryden's Æneid.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year. Milton.

5. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

To free the ports, and ope the Punique land
To Trojan guests; left, ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryden.

6. To gain by violence or power.

My heart is your's; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear;
If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
Could you not that, nor that small part afford?
Dryden.

7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high,
Atrides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.
Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide
This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,
Dare boldly go a new-found world to force.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

8. To ravish; to violate by force.

Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

9. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.

Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forc'd conceits. Addison.

10. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison.

Here let them lye,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be our's,
We might have met them dareful, beard to beard.
Shakspeare.

If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oroonoke, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh's Apology.

11. To FORCE out. To extort.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from Luther expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To FORCE. v. n. To lay stress upon.

This word I have only found in the following passage.

That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his backpiece before and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries, but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Camden's Remains.

FORCEDLY. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unnaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet's Theory.

FORCEFUL. adj. [force and full.] Violent;
strong; driven with great might;
impetuous.

Why, what need we Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be,
Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palemon from prison took his flight. Dryden.
He pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went.
Pope.

FORCEFULLY. adv. [from forceful.]
Violently; impetuously.

FORCELESS. adj. [from force.] Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.

FORCEPS. n. s. [Latin.]

Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quincy.

FORCER. n. s. [from force.]

1. That which forces, dries, or constrains.

2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins' Dædalus.

FORCIBLE. adj. [from force.]

1. Strong; mighty: opposed to weak.

That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

Who therefore can invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies? Milton.

2. Violent; impetuous.

Jersey, below'd by all; for all must feel
The influence of a form and mind,
Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,
Like mingl'd streams, more forcible when join'd:
Jersey shall at thy altars stand,
Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words? Job.
God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation so forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder. Raleigh's History.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far,
Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd,
And in embraces forcible and foul Ingend'ring with me. Milton.

The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

6. Valid; binding; obligatory.

FORCIBLENESS. n. s. [from forcible.]

Force; violence.

FORCIBLY. adv. [from forcible.]

1. Strongly; powerfully.

The gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Tillotson.

2. Impetuously; with great strength.

3. By violence; by force.

He himself with greedy great desire
Into the castle enter'd forcibly. Fairy Queen.

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital. Bacon.

This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle. Hammond.

FORCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and enclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind. Brown.

When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD. n. s. [ford, Saxon, from fapan, to pass.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be pass'd without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;
They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
All taste of living wight. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplor'd Permit my ghost to pass the stygian ford:
But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

To FORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Raleigh's History.
Fording his current where thou find'st it low.
Denham.

FORDBLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.

Pliny placeth the Schenitæ upon the Euphrates,
where the same beginneth to be fordable. Raleigh.
A countryman founded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and,
on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Estrange.

FORE. adj. [fope, Saxon.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move strongest and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression.
Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

FORE. adv.

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four sakers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore in composition.

To FOREADVISE. v. n. [fore and advise.]
To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.

Thus to have said,
As you were foreadvise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

To FOREAPPOINT. v. n. [fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.

To FOREARM. v. a. [fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South.

He forearms his care
With rules to push his fortune, or to bear.
Dryden's Æneid.

To FOREBODE. v. n. [fore and bode.]

1. To prognosticate; to foretell.

An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate,
With these foreboding words restrains their hate.
Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be prescient of; to feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore:
My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more.
Dryden.

My soul foreboded I should find the bow'r
Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r.
Pope.

FOREBODER. n. f. [from forebode.]

1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.

Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBY. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won

Whilst the heavy plowman snoars, All with weary task foredone. Shakspeare.

To FOREDO'OM. v. a. [fore and doom.] To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryden's Aeneid.

The willing metal will obey thy hand, Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate, Thou art foredoom'd to view the stygian state. Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FORE-END. n. f. [fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid More pious debts to heaven than in all The fore-end of my time. Shakspeare.

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm. Bacon.

FOREFA'THER. n. f. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd From some forefather grief: mine is not so. Shakspeare.

Shall I not be distraught, And madly play with my forefathers joints. Shakspeare.

Our great forefathers, Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFEND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for, prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit; No, heav'n's forefend! I would not kill thy soul. Shakspeare.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend, May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose, Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away Of him, that, his particular to forefend, Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakspeare.

FOREFINGER. n. f. [fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate stone

On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakspeare. Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacham.

Some wear this on the middle-finger, as the antient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the fore-finger. Brown.

FO'REFOOT. n. f. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.] The anterior foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give. Shakspeare.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. 2 Maccabees.

I continue my line from thence to the heel; then making the breast with the eminency thereof, bring out his near forefoot, which I finish. Peacham.

To FOREGO'. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will, To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill; If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither fore-given nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser.

He is a great adventurer, said he, That hath his sword through hard essay foregone; And now hath vowed 'till he avenged be Of that despite, never to wearen none. F. Queen.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego So good, so noble, and so true a master? Shakspeare.

Let us not forego That for a trifle which was bought with blood. Shakspeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego Thy sweet converse and love so dearly join'd, To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milton.

This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone, Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shakspeare.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle on Colours.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs. Woodward.

3. To lose.

This is the very ecstasy of love, Whose violent property foregoes itself, And leads the will to desperate undertakings. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

FOREGO'ER. n. f. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive Than our foregoers. Shakspeare.

FO'REGROUND. n. f. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the fore-ground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed to be in an open field. Dryden.

FO'REHAND. n. f. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part. Not in use.

The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The finew and the forehand of our host. Shakspeare.

FO'REHAND. adj. Done sooner than is regular.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin. Shakspeare.

FOREHAND'ED. adj. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too. Dryden.

FO'REHEAD. n. f. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakspeare.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes. Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

FOREHOLDING. n. f. [fore and hold.]

Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, foreholdings, and old wives tales! L'Estrange.

FOREIGN. adj. [forain, French; forano, Spanish; from foris, Latin.]

1. Not of this country; not domestick.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shakspeare.
The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milton.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers. Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison's Cato.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.

This design is not foreign from some peoples thoughts. Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakspeare. Hen. VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

FOREIGNER. n. f. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.
To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong'd a friend, a kinsman, and a son. Dryden's Aeneid.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs are all foreigners. Addison.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FOREIGNNESS. n. f. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right. Locke.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Camden's Remains.

TO FOREJUDGE. v. a. [fore and judge.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessioned; to prejudge.

TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.] To have prescience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after winter the spring shall come; after the spring, summer and harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew. Dryden's Iliad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryden.

FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances. More.

FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. f. [fore and knowledge.] Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hooker.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chuses to speak with you. Shakspeare.

If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their faults;
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown: Milton.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters. Pope.

FO'RELAND. n. f. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails. Milton.

TO FORELAY. v. a. [fore and lay.]

1. To lay wait for; to entrap by ambush.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake. Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

TO FORELIFT. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any antient part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Spenser.

FO'RELOCK. n. f. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forepart of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,
Unless she do him by the forelock take. Spenser.
Hyacinthine locks,

Round from his parted forelock manly hung,
Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad. Milton.

Zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait. Milton.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it. Swift.

FO'REMAN. n. f. [fore and man.] The first or chief person.

He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury. Addison's Spectator.

FOREMENTIONED. adj. [fore and mentioned.] Mentioned or recited before.

It is observable that many participles are compounded with fore, whose verbs have no such composition.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementioned figure on the pillar. Addison on Italy.

FO'REMOST. adj. [from fore.]

1. First in place.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Sidney.

Our women in the foremost ranks appear;
March to the fight, and meet your mistress there. Dryden.

The bold Sempronius,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,

As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous even to madness! Addison's Cato.

2. First in dignity.

These ride foremost in the field,
As they the foremost rank of honour held. Dryden.

That promises more thousands: honour's train Is longer than his foreskirt. Shakspeare.

TO FORESLACK. v. a. [fore and slack.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion *foreslack*ed, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Spenser's State of Ireland.

TO FORESLOW. v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslow Their hasty pace. Fairfax.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again, Brings every grace triumphant in her train: The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,

Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryd.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Bishop Hall.

Chremes, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreflow?
Some such have been: but ah! by tempests spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none.
P. Fletcher.

To FORESLO'W. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory:
Foreflow no longer make we hence amain. Shaksp.

To FORESPEAK. v. n. [fore and speak.]

Thou hast forespoke my being in these wars,
And say'st it is not fit. Shaksp.

FORESPENT. adj. [for and spent.]

1. Wasted; tired; spent.

After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shaksp.

2. Forepassed; past. [fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent? F. Queen.
You shall find his vanities forespent,
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shaksp.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sencer;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shaksp.

FORESPURRER. n. f. [fore and spur.]

One that rides before.
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer comes before his lord. Shaksp.

FOREST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macheth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunfinane's high hill Shall come against him.

—That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root. Shaksp.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head.
Roscommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure.

The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regarers, bailiffs, and beedles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair. Corwell.

To FORESTALL. v. a. [fore and tallan, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all

And give men turns of speech; do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milton.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall.
Fairy Queen.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shaksp.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shaksp.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I will not forestall your judgment of the rest. Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

Shakspeare.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form.

Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no gift. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakspeare. Hen. viii.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother,
Sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind.

Dryden's Æneid.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isaiah.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakspeare. Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakspeare.

A long table, and a square table, or a seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors opinions that sit lower. Bacon's Eff.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes.

Davies.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms.

Clarendon.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love? A. Philips.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below.

Dryden's Æneid.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back.

Watts' Logick.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakspeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidney.

Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
Litt'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear, Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form did adjoin itself.

Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To FORM. v. a. [formo, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.

God formed man of the dust of the ground.
Genesis.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fusil, or grav'n in metal. Milton.

Determin'd to advance into our room

A creature form'd of earth. Milton.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air.

Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.

Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet. Milton.
Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd. Milton.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his heroes,
to give him piety or valour for his manners.
Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;

And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time.

Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind.

Dryden's Virgil.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, Fr. formalis,
Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,

In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakspeare.

Formal in apparel,

In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Shakspeare.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish
the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden;
not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillingfleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristick; regular; proper.

Thou shoud'st come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man. Shakspeare.

I will not let him stir,
'Till I have us'd th' approv'd means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shakspeare.

FORMALIST. n. f. [formaliste, French; from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satire to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficialities to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, staunch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a fly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

FORMALITY. n. f. [formalité, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefaced perjury, and fix the shame. Dry.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville's Scepiss.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pounds to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillingfleet.

TO FORMALIZE. v. a. [formaliser, Fr. from formal. A word not now in use.]

1. To model; to modify.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FORMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law, Depose him. Shakspeare's Richard II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The heathens and the christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalridge.

FORMATION. n. f. [formation, French; from formo, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of vulcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fœtus. Arbuthnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FORMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.]

Having the power of giving form; plastick.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FORMER. n. f. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Sax. first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakspeare.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critick: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer. Addison.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbuthnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Lat. formidabile, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrifick; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's Aeneid, Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread. 2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shew'd the formidableness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.]

In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; wanting regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakspeare.

FORMULARY. n. f. [formulaire, French; from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FORMULE. n. f. [formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNIFICATE. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown.

FORNICATION. n. f. [fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage, or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakspeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, thou playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by. Ezekiel.

FORNICA'TOR. n. f. [fornicateur, Fr. from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FORNICA'TRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.]

A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;
Let her have needful but not slavish means.

Shakspeare.

To FORSA'KE. v. a. pret. forsook; part. pass. forsook or forsaken. [versar-ken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul; the room in 's heart wild passions took.

Cowley.

Orestes comes in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his falshood, and forsake him first:

I know you hate him. A. Philips' Distrest Mother.

Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,
Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Po, e.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate.

Dryden's Æn.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took.

Dryden's Ovid.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsaken of all fight she left the shore. Dryden.

Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more.

Rowe.

FORSA'KER. n. f. [from forsake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God. Apocryp.

FORSOO'TH. adv. [forroðe, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection! Shakspeare.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate.

Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French.

Holder on Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord.

Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown.

Arbutnot.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of.

Baker on Learning.

2. It is supposed once to have been a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the words yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakspeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

To FORSWE'AR. v. a. pret. forswore; part. forsworn. [forþswærjan, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shaksp.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most monstrously to have.

Shakspeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold!

Dryden's Juvenal.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friends, shall I be much forsworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shaksp.

One says, he never should endure the fight
Of that forsworn, that wrongs both lands and laws.

Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Theseus;
And yet am false, forsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falshood.

Smith.

To FORSWE'AR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forswearing, and for murder too. Shaksp.

FORSWE'ARER. n. f. [from forswear.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. f. [fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort d'lor; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest.

Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their isle defend.

Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part.

Denham's Sophy.

My fury does, like jealous forts, pursue
With death ev'n strangers who but come to view.

Dryden.

FOR'TED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion. Shakspeare.

FORTH. adv. [forð, Saxon; whence further and furthest.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out. Fairy Queen.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner.

Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance
vow'd

For Bitias' death. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shakspeare's Othello.
I have no mind of feasting forth to-night.

Shakspeare.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
Will she not forth?

Shakspeare.

When winter past, and summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements;
and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them.

Spenser.

Ev'n that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wail'd his father's fortunes forth of France.

Shakspeare.

5. Out into a publick character; publick view.

You may set forth the same with farmhouses.

Peacham.

But when your troubled country call'd you
forth,

Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a prosp'rous end.

Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end. Out of use.

You cousin,

Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shaksp.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace.

Hammond.

8. On to the end. Out of use.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bad me say forth; I said I was taught no more.

Memoir in Strype.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret. Shaksp.

Some forth their cabbins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know.

Donne.

FORTHCO'MING. adj. [forth and coming.]

Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming.

Shakspeare.

We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all.

Shakspeare's Henry vi.

FORTHISSUING. adj. [forth and issue.]

Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthissuing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty ax, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edg'd.

Pope's Odyssey.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [forth and right.]

Straight forward; without flexions.
Not in use.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind.

Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself.

Sidney.

Arrived there, they passed in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide.

Fairy Queen.
Thither forthright he rode to rouse the prey.
Dryden.

FORTHRIGHT. n. f. A straight path.

Here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders. Shakspeare.

FORTHWITH. adv. [forth and with.]
Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
And dreams, 'gan now to take more sound repast.
Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.
Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sov'reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn counsel forthwith to be held At Pandæmonium. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South.

FO'RTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FORTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [fortification, French; from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss.
It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation,
yet understood the art of fortification. Broome.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.
Government of the Tongue.

FORTIFIER. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

To FORTIFY. v. a. [fortifier, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunfinane he strongly fortifies. Shaksp.
He fortified the city against besieging. Ecelus.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.

To fortify the former opinions Toftatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned.
Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face.
Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

To FORTIFY. v. n. To raise strong places.

Thou us impower'd
To fortify thus far and overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyfs.
Milton.

FO'RTILAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a block-house.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win.
Spenser.

In all straights and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set,
which should keep and command the straight.
Spenser on Ireland.

FO'RTIN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hanmer.

Thou hast talk'd
Of Palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakspeare.

FORTITUDE. n. f. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroic martyrdom Unsung. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

FO'RTLET. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FO'RTNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from fourteen-nights, peoppe'tyne night, Sax.
It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights:
thus we say, this day seven-night. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum, ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late,
that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before.
Swift.

FO'RTRESS. n. f. [fortresse, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses.
Spenser on Ireland.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;

Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave.
Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their stinty bulwarks.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.
There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuit, French;
fortuitus, Latin.] Accidental; casual;
happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Ray.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?
Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.]
Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n. f. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakspeare.

He sigh'd; and cou'd not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryden.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes them look aside, and so their footing miss. Dryden.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.]
Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wife, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.]
Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

FORTUNE. n. f. [fortuna, Latin;
fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that ardent whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakspeare.
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize.
Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life ; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Success, good or bad ; event.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live ;

Our equal crimes, shall equal fortune give. Dryd.

5. Estate ; possessions.

If thou do'st,

And this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way To noble fortunes. Shakspeare's King Lear.

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh

To raise my fortunes. Shakspeare's King Lear.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power

Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour ? Dryd.

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit

He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryd.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman : generally of a woman.

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,

Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands ;

Which may produce a story worth the telling,

Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing. Prologue to Orphan.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. SpeEtator.

When mis's delights in her spinnet,

A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity ; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,

To find out mine, look not, alas, on me :

But mark her face, and all the features heed ;

For on'y there is writ my destiny. Cowley.

To FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To befall ; to fall out ; to happen ; to come casually to pass.

It fortuned, as fair it then befel

Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,

Of ancient time there was a springing well,

From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortuned the same night that a christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning. Knolles.

I'll tell you as we pass along,

That you will wonder what hath fortuned. Shaks.

Here fortun'd curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.

FortUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious shew

Of the full fortun'd Cæsar ever shall

Be brook'd with me. Shakspeare.

FortUNEBOOK. n. f. [fortune and book.]

A book consulted to know fortune or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look

Beauty lays ope love's fortunebook ;

On whose fair revolutions wait

The obsequious motions of love's fate. Crashaw.

FortUNEHUNTER. n. f. [fortune and hunt.]

A man whose employment is to inquire after women with great portions, to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortune

hunters and fortune stealers. SpeEtator.

To FortUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men ; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune telling. Shakspeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shaks.

The gypsies were to divide the money got by

tealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Walton.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd

The mystick figures of her hand,

He tipples palmestry, and dines

On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleaveland.

FortUNETELLER. n. f. [fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people, by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,

A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shaks.

A Welchman being at a sessions-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up their hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers ; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot ? Duppa.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other,

to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange.

Long ago a fortuneteller

Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

FortY. adj. [τεοπεριζ, Saxon.]

Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them. Shakspeare.

He that upon levity quits his station in hopes to be better, 'tis forty to one loses. L'Estrange.

FORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Any publick place.

The forum was a publick place in Rome,

where lawyers and orators made their speeches

before their proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watts on the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,

And near a forum flank'd with marble shines,

Where the bold youth, the num'rous fleets to store,

Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar. Pope.

To Forwa'NDER. v. a. [for and wander.]

To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the ling'ring day

They travelled had, when as they far esp'y'd

A weary wight forward'ring by the way. Fairy Queen.

FORWARD. } adv. [forpeard, Saxon.]

For'WARDS. } Toward a part or place before ; onward ; progressively ; straight before.

When fervent sorrow flaked was,

She up arose, resolving him to find

Alive or dead, and forward forth doth pass. Fairy Queen.

From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hooker.

He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth off his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon's Essays.

The Rhodian ship passed through the whole

Roman fleet, backwards and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Drepanum. Arbuthnot.

For'WARD. adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Warm ; earnest ; not backward.

They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forwarded to do. Gal.

'Tis a per'ous boy,

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable ;

He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakspeare's Richard III.

5. Premature ; early ripe.

Short summer lightly has a forward spring.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

6. Quick ; ready ; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made,

they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent ; anterior : opposed to posterior.

Let us take the instant by the forward top ;

For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees

Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time

Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakspeare.

8. Not behindhand ; not inferior.

My good Camillo,

She is as forward of her breeding, as

She is i' th' rear o' our birth. Shakspeare.

To For'WARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten ; to quicken ; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them ; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon's Natural History.

Whenever I shine,

I forward the grafts and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronise ; to advance.

For'WARDER. n. f. [from forward.] He who promotes any thing.

For'WARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Atterbury.

For'WARDNESS. n. f. [from forward.]

1. Eagerness ; ardour ; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker.

Is it so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bridle to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hooker.

The great ones were in forwardness, the people in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible affection. Bacon.

2. Quickness ; readiness.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness :

that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Wotton.

3. Earliness ; early ripeness.

4. Confidence, assurance ; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into England, so called from the ditches on each side.

FOSSIL. adj. [fossilis, Latin ; fossile,

French.] That is dug out of the earth.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas. Woodward.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemm, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure. Woodward's Natural History.

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts. Arbuthnot.

Fo'ssil. n. f.

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped. Bentley.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole. Hill's Mat. Med.

Those bodies which will melt in the fire are called minerals, the rest fossils. Pemberton.

To FOSTER. v. a. [fosterian, Saxon.]

1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

FOSTERCHILD. n. f. [foster cild, Saxon.] A child nursed by a woman not the mother, or bred by a man not the father.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their fosterfathers. Davies on Ireland.

The goddess thus beguill'd,
With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild. Addis.

FOSTERDAM. n. f. [foster and dam.] A nurse; one that performs the office of a mother by giving food to a young child.

There, by the wolf, were laid the martial twins:
Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung;
The fosterdam loll'd out her fawning tongue.
Dryden's Aeneid.

FOSTEREARTH. n. f. [foster and earth.] Earth by which the plant is nourished, though it did not grow at first in it.

In vain the nursing grove
Seems fair a while, cherish'd with fosterearth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails! Philips.

FO'STERER. n. f. [from foster.] A nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers; the rich men selling, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children: in the opinion of the Irish, fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Davies on Ireland.

FOSTERFATHER. n. f. [foster fader, Saxon.] One who gives food in the place of the father.

In Ireland fosterchildren do love and are beloved by their fosterfathers, and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies.

The duke of Bretagne having been an host and a kind of parent or fosterfather to the king, in his tenderness of age and weakness of fortune, did look for aid this time from king Henry. Bacon.

Tyrreus the fosterfather of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden.

FOSTERMOTHER. n. f. [foster and mother.] A nurse.

FOSTERNURSE. n. f. [foster and nurse.] This is an improper compound, because foster and nurse mean the same.] A nurse.

Our fosternurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks. Shakspeare's King Lear.

FOSTERSON. n. f. [foster and son.] One fed and educated, though not the son by nature.

sition, as well as the foulest atheism, that can be imagined. Hale.

Satire has always shone among the rest,
And is the boldest way if not the best,
To tell men truly of their foulest faults,
To laugh at their vain deeds, and vainer thoughts. Dryden.

4. Not lawful; not according to the established rules.

By foul play were we heav'd thence,
But blessedly help'd hither. Shakspeare's Tempest.

5. Hateful; ugly; loathsome.

Th' other half did woman's shape retain,
Most loathsome, filthy, foul, and full of vile disdain. Fairy Queen.

Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop? Shakspeare's Tempest.

Foul fights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul fights do not much offend. Bacon.

All things that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.

6. Disgraceful; shameful.

Too well I see and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
Hath lost us heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Who first seduc'd them to that foul revolt?
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Reason half extinct
Or impotent, or else approving, sees
The foul disorder. Thomson's Spring.

7. Coarse; gross.

You will have no notion of delicacies if you table with them: they are all for rank and foul feeding, and spoil the best provisions in cooking.
Felton on the Classics.

8. Full of gross humours, or bad matter; wanting purgation or mundification.

You perceive the body of our kingdom,
How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger near the heart of it.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.

9. Not bright; not serene.

Who's there besides foul weather?
One minded like the weather, most inquitly.
Shakspeare's King Lear.
Be fair or foul, or rain or shine,
The joys I have profess'd, in spite of fate are mine. Dryden.

10. With rough force; with unseasonable violence.

So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.
In his fallies their men might fall foul of each other. Clarendon.

The great art of the devil, and the principal deceit of the heart is to keep fair with God himself, while men fall foul upon his laws. South.

11. [Among seamen.] Entangled: as, a rope is foul of the anchor.

To FOUL. v. a. [fulan, Saxon.] To daub; to bemire; to make filthy; to dirty.

Sweep your walks from autumnal leaves, lest the worms draw them into their holes, and foul your garden. Evelyn.

While Traulus all his ordure scatters,
To foul the man he chiefly flatters. Swift.
She fouls a smock more in one hour than the kitchen-maid doth in a week. Swift.

FO'ULEACED. adj. [foul and faced.] Having an ugly or hateful visage.

If black scandal, or foul face'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,

Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

FO'ULLY. adv. [from foul.]

1. Filthily; nastily; odiously; hatefully; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully.

We in the world's wide mouth
Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of. Shaksp.
The letter to the protector was gilded over with many smooth words; but the other two did fully and foully set forth his obstinacy, avarice, and ambition. Hayward.

O brother, brother! Filbert still is true;
I foully wrong'd him: do, forgive me, do. Gay.

2. Not lawfully; not fairly.

Thou play'st most foully for't. Shakspeare.

FOULMO'UTED. adj. [foul and mouth.]

Scurrilous; habituated to the use of opprobrious terms and epithets.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouth'd man as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

It was allowed by every body, that so foul-
mouthed a witness never appeared in any cause.
Addison.

My reputation is too well established in the world to receive any hurt from such a foulmouthed scoundrel as he. Arbutnot.

Now singing shrill, and scolding oft between,
Scolds answer foulmouth'd scolds; bad neighbourhood I ween. Pope.

FO'ULNESS. n. f. [from foul.]

1. The quality of being foul; filthiness; nastiness.

The ancients were wont to make garments that were not destroyed but purified by fire; and whereas the spots or foulness of other cloaths are washed out, in these they were usually burnt away. Wilkins.

2. Pollution; impurity.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.
Shakspeare.

There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foulness: it is the virgin of the world. Bacon.

3. Hatefulness; atrociousness.

Consul, you are too mild:
The foulness of some facts takes thence all mercy. Ben Jonson.

It is the wickedness of a whole life, discharging all its filth and foulness into this one quality, as into a great sink or common shore. South.

4. Ugliness; deformity.

He by an affection sprung up from excessive beauty, should not delight in horrible foulness.
Sidney.

He's fallen in love with your foulness, and he'll fall in love with my anger. Shakspeare.
The fury laid aside

Her looks and limbs and with new methods tried
The foulness of th' infernal form to hide. Dryden.

5. Dishonesty; want of candour.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity
and all fallacies or foulness of intentions; especially to that personated devotion, under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised.
Hammond.

FOUND. The pret. and part. pass. of find.

I am fought of them that asked not for me:
I am found of them that fought me not. Isaiah.

Authors now find, as once Achilles found,
The whole is mortal if a part's unfound. Young.

To FOUND. v. a. [fundare, Latin;
fonder, French.]

1. To lay the basis of any building.

It fell not; for it was founded upon a rock.
Matthew

He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Psalms.

2. To build; to raise.

These tunes of reason are Amphion's lyre,
Wherewith he did the Theban city found. Davies.

They Gabian walls, and strong Fidenæ rear,
Nomentum, Bola with Pometia found,
And raise Colatian tow'rs on rocky ground.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. To establish; to erect.

This also shall they gain by their delay
In the wide wilderness; there they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse, Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws or-dain'd. Milton.

He founding a library, gathered together the acts of the kings and prophets. 2 Mac.

4. To give birth or original to: as, he founded an art; he founded a family.

5. To raise upon, as on a principle or ground.

Though some have made use of the opinion of some schoolmen, that dominion is founded in grace; were it admitted as the most certain truth, it could never warrant any such sanguinary method. Decay of Piety.

A right to the use of the creatures is founded originally in the right a man has to subsist. Locke.

Power, founded on contract, can descend only to him who has a right by that contract. Locke.

The reputation of the Iliad they found upon the ignorance of his times. Pope.

6. To fix firm.

Fleance is escap'd.

—Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect,

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock. Shaksp.

To FOUND. v. a. [fundere, Latin; fondre, French.] To form by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.

A second multitude

With wondrous art founded the massy ore,
Severing each kind, scum'd the bullion dross.
Milton.

FOUNDATIO. n. f. [fondation, French.]

1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which ministrerth unto the other nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed.
Hooker.

That is the way to make the city flat,
To bring the roof to the foundation,
To bury all. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

O Jove, I think,
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Shakspeare.

I draw a line along shore;
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryd.

2. The act of fixing the basis.

Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest.
Tickel.

3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds. Tillotson.

That she should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it. Locke.

4. Original; rise.

Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses. Hooker.

5. A revenue settled and established for any purpose, particularly charity.

He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation. Swift.

6. Establishment; settlement.

FO'UNDER. n. f. [from found.]

1. A builder; one who raises an edifice;

one who presides at the erection of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.

Nor was Præneste's founder wanting there,
Whom fame reports the son of Mulciber. Dryden.

2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founders charity in the dust laid low. Dryd.

This hath been experimentally proved by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air. Bentley.

3. One from whom any thing has its original or beginning.

And the rude notions of pedantick schools
Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rules.
Roscommon.

When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,
The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the centre with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryden.

King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the peace of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles. Addison's Freeholder.
Nor can the skilful herald trace
The founder of thy ancient race. Swift.

4. [fondeur, French.] A caster; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.

Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pewte-rers to their pewter, to make it sound more clear like silver. Grew's Museum.

To FO'UNDER. v. a. [fondre, French.]

To cause such a foreness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,

Or night kept chain'd below. Shakspeare.

I have foundered nine score and odd posts;
and here, traveltainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken fir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight:
but what of that? he saw me and yielded.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood.
Derfet.

Brutes find out where their talents lie:

A bear will not attempt to fly;

A founder'd horse will oft debate,

Before he tries a five-barr'd gate. Swift.

If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and foundered into the bargain. Swift.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

To FO'UNDER. v. n. [from fond, French, the bottom.]

1. To sink to the bottom.

New ships, built at those rates, have been ready to founder in the seas with every extraordinary storm. Raleigh's Essays.

2. To fail; to miscarry.

In this point
All his tricks founder; and he brings his physick
After his patient's death. Shakspeare's Hen. VIII.

FO'UNDERY. n. f. [fonderi, Fr. from found.] A place where figures are formed of melted metal; a casting house.

FO'UNDLING. n. f. [from found of find.]

FOU

A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow.

Sidney.

I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance.

Dryden's Juvenal.

A piece of charity practised by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents.

Addison.

The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,

And long had fought his sufferings to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art.

Gay.

FO'UNDRESS. n. f. [from founder.]

1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, or begins any thing.

2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.

For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Clarissa was their chief'st foundress.

Fairy Queen.

For zeal like hers, her servants were to show;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the foundress, and attendant too.

Dryd.

FOUNT. } n. f. [fons, Latin; fontaine, French.]

1. A well; a spring.

He set before him spread
A table of celestial food divine,
Ambrosial fruits, fetch'd from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink.

Milt.

2. A small basin of springing water.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Can a man drink better from the fountain finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf?

Taylor.

Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal fount he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise.

Addison.

3. A jet; a spout of water.

Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or slime, or mud.

Bacon.

4. The head or first spring of a river.

All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenor of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends.

Dryden.

5. Original; first principle; first cause.

Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness.

Common Prayer.

You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains.

Peacham.

This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England.

Spratt's Sermons.

FO'UNTAINLESS. adj. [from fountain.]
Having no fountain; wanting a spring.

So large

The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert fountainless and dry.

Milton.

FO'UNTFUL. adj. [fount and full.] Full of springs.

But when the fountful Ida's top they scal'd with utmost haste,
All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks.

Chapman.

TO FOUPPE. v. a. To drive with sudden impetuosity. Out of use.

We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as smoothly and moderately as any of the nor-three nations, who foute their words out of the throat with fat and full spirits.

Camden.

FOUR. adj. [peopen, Saxon.] Twice two.

Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four;
Myself the fifth.

Pope's Odyssey.

FOURBE. n. f. [French.] A cheat; a tricking fellow. Not in use.

Jove's envoy, through the air,
Brings dismal tidings; as if such low care
Could reach their thoughts, or their repose disturb!

Thou art a false impostor, and a fourbe.

Denham.

FOURFOLD. adj. [four and fold.] Four times told.

He shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he had no pity.

2 Samuel.

FOURFOOTED. adj. [four and foot.] Quadruped; having four feet.

Augur Astylos, whose art in vain
From fight dissuaded the fourfooted train,
Now beat the hoof with Nessus on the plain.

Dryden.

FOURSCORE. adj. [four and score.]

1. Four times twenty; eighty.

When they were out of reach they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain, having lost fourscore of their ships, and the greater part of their men.

Bacon's War with Spain.

The Chiots were first a free people, being a commonwealth, maintaining a navy of fourscore ships.

Samlys.

The Liturgy had, by the practice of near fourscore years, obtained great veneration from all sober protestants.

Clarendon.

2. It is used elliptically for fourscore years in numbering the age of man.

At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week.

Shakspere.

Some few might be of use in counsel upon great occasions 'till after threescore and ten; and the two late ministers in Spain were so 'till fourscore.

Temple.

FOURSQUARE. adj. [four and square.]

Quadrangular; having four sides and angles equal.

The temple of Bel was invironed with a wall carried four-square, of great height and beauty; and on each square certain brazen gates curiously engraven.

Raleigh's History.

A fig; a scoff: a word of contempt.
Not used.

FOX

A putra for the world, and worldlings base.

Shakspere's Henry IV.

FOWL. n. f. [fugel, puhl, Saxon; vogel, Dutch.] A winged animal; a bird. It is colloquially used of edible birds; but in books, of all the feathered tribes. Fowl is used collectively: as, we dined upon fish and fowl.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their male subjects, and at their controuls.

Shakspere.

Lucullus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, this is a marvellous house for the summer; but methinks very cold for winter. Lucullus answered, do you not think me as wise as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the winter season?

Bacon's Apophthegms.

This mighty breath

Instructs the fowls of heaven.

Thomson's Spring.

TO FOWL. v. n. [from the noun.] To kill birds for food or game.

FO'WLER. n. f. [from fowl.] A sportsman who pursues birds.

The fowler, warn'd

By those good omens, with swift early steps Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields and glades,

Offensive to the birds.

Philips.

With slaughter'ing guns th' unwearied fowler roves,

When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves.

Pope.

FO'WLINGPIECE. n. f. [fowl and piece.]

A gun for birds.

'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good fowlingpiece.

1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears, and a bushy tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes and preying upon fowls or small animals.

The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb.

Shakspere.

He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese.

Shakspere's Macbeth.

These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors.

Locke.

2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.

FO'XCASE. n. f. [fox and case.] A fox's skin.

One had better be laughed at for taking a fox-case for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a case.

L'Estrange.

FO'XCHASE. n. f. [fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.

See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a foxchase, wise at a debate.

Pope.

FO'XEVL. n. f. [fox and evil.] A kind of disease in which the hair sheds.

He Easterland subdued, and Denmark won,
 And of them both did foy and tribute raise.

Fairy Queen.

TO FRACT. v. a. [fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.

His days and times are past,
 And my reliance on his fracted dates
 Has smit my credit. Shakspeare's Timon.

FRACTION. n. f. [fraction, Fr. fractio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.

The surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. A broken part of an integral.

The fractions of her faith, arts of her love,
 The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
 Of her o'er eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes.

Shakspeare.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. Brown.

Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbutnot on Coins.

FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number; comprising a broken number.

We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Cocker's Arithmetick.

FRACTURE. n. f. [fractura, Latin.]

1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.

That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale.

2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.

But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,
 That so the broken bones may joy,
 And tune together in a well-set song,
 Full of his praises,
 Who dead men raises;

Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong. Herbert.

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp.

TO FRACTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To break a bone.

The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wise man's Surgery.

FRAGILE. adj. [fragile, Fr. fragilis, Latin.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.

To ease them of their griefs,
 Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
 That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
 In life's uncertain voyage. Shakspeare's Timon.
 The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon.

When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,
 'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Denham.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glanville.

2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.

Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,
 And fragile arms, much instrument of war,

Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
 Before mine eyes thou'lt set. Milton.

FRAGILITY. n. f. [from fragile.]

1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.

To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.

Fear the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune. Knolles' History.

3. Frailty; liability to fault.

All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Watson.

FRA'GMENT. n. f. [fragmentum, Lat.]

A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command,
 Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand. Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davidic, has shewn us this way to improvement. Watts on the Mind.

If a thin or plated body, which being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opticks.

Some on painted wood

Transfix'd the fragments, some prepar'd the food. Pope's Odyssey.

FRA'GMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.]

Composed of fragments. Not elegant, nor in use.

She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'lt this,

What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
 Thou know'lt, and that it is not worth a thought;
 He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Donne.

FRAGOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash. Not used.

Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before
 The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sandys.

FRA'GRANCE. } n. f. [fragrantia, Lat.]

FRA'GRANCY. } Sweetness of smell; pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Eve separate he spies,

Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood Half spy'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
 Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.

Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam

Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
 To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
 Breath'd aromattick fragrancies around. Pope.

FRA'GRANT. adj. [fragrans, Latin.]

Odorous; sweet of smell.

Fragrant the fertile earth
 After soft show'rs; and sweet the coming on
 Of grateful evening mild. Milton.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
 Upon her head the various wreath:
 The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
 Their scent less fragrant than her breath. Prior.

FRA'GRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.]

With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mert.

FRAIL. n. f.

1. A basket made of rushes.

2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAIL. adj. [fragilis, Latin.]

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,
 As force without, fevers within can kill. Davies.

When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fail in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

FRAILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.

FRAILTY. n. f. [from frail.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shakspeare.

Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:

Ere I to thee, thou to thyself was cruel. Milt.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Lecke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural.

Love did his reason blind,
 And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dry.

Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
 Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
 And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
 Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
 And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

That christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Law.

FRAISCHEUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

Hither in summer-evenings you repair,
 To taste the fraischeur of the purer air. Dryden.

FRAISE. n. f. [French.] the caul of an animal.] A pancake with bacon in it.

TO FRAME. v. a.

1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.

The double gates he findeth locked fast;
 The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
 The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.

2. To fit one to another.

They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do necessities to their convenient use, than to fight. Abbat.

Hew timber, saw it, frame it, and set it together. Mortimer.

3. To make; to compose.

Then chusing out few words most horrible,
 Thereof did verses frame. Spenser.

Fight valiantly to-day;

And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;
 For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakspeare.

4. To regulate; to adjust.

Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.

5. To form any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their soldier; and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shakspeare.
I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will.

Shakspeare's Henry vi.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense or from its own operations about them. Locke.

Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms.

Granville.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies,
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope.

How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years. Watts.

7. To contrive; to plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon.

8. To settle; to scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Shakspeare. Coriol.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles. Bacon.

FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fabrick; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility, turn themselves any way, as it might happen.

Hooker.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milton.

Divine Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labour of a god; and all along

Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong.

Dryden.

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson.

2. Any thing made so as to enclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame.

Dryden's Juvenal.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright. Shakspeare.

Your steady soul preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same. Swift.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church.

Clarendon.

5. Contrivance; projection.

John the bastard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies. Shakspeare.

6. Mechanical construction.

7. Shape; form; proportion.

A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.

FRAMER. n. f. [from frame; framman, Saxon.] Maker; former; contriver;
schemer.

The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if actions were predetermined. Hammond.

There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals.

Arbutnot on Coins.

FRAMPOLD. n. f. [This word is written by Dr. Hacket, frampul. I know not its original.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.

Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakspeare.

The frampul man could not be pacified.

Hacket's Life of Williams.

FRANCHISE. n. f. [franchise, French.]

1. Exemption from any onerous duty.

2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.

They granted them markets, and other fran- chises, and erected corporate towns among them.

Davies on Ireland.

His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields.

Dryden.

3. District; extent of jurisdiction.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser.

To FRANCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.

I lose no honour

In seeking to augment it; but still keep My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

FRANGIBLE. adj. [frango, Latin.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.

Though it seems the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frangible. Boyle.

FRANION. n. f. [Of this word I know not the derivation.] A paramour; a boon companion.

First, by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy,

Might not be found, a franker franion. Fairy Q.

FRANK. adj. [franc, French.]

1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.

The moister sorts of trees yield little moss, for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs. Bacon.

They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Spratt.

'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be
frank of civilities that cost them nothing.

L'Estrange.

For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.

FRANKALMOIGNE. n. f. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank aumone, or frankalmoigne, which, according to Briton, is a tenure by divine service. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FRANKINCENSE. n. f. [frank and incense;
so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable.
The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it continues to be in many parts. We are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and as to the tree which produces it.

Hill.

Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frank- incense. Exodus.

I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brerewood on Languages.

Black ebony only will in India grow,
And od'rous frankincense on the Sabæan bough.

Dryden's Virgil.

Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile, Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfum'd the isle. Pope.

FRANKLIN. n. f. [from frank.] A steward;
a bailiff of land. It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly Englified a gentleman servant. Not in use.

A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walked in,
Where them does meet a franklin fair and free.

Fairy Queen.

FRANKLY. adv. [from frank.]

1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.

Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakspeare. Meas. for Meas.
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

Shakspeare's Henry viii.

When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Luke.

By the toughness of the earth, the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do. Bacon.

He entered very frankly into those new designs, which were contrived at court. Clarendon.

FRANKNESS. n. f. [from frank.]

1. Plainness of speech; openness; inge-nuousness.

When the conde duke had some eclaireissement with the duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared

with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards. Addison's Guardian.

2. Liberality; bounteousness.
3. Freedom from reserve.

He delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, word by word, what Kalandar had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.

The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. s. [francplegium, Latin; of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidei jussor.] A pledge or surety for free-men.

The ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus francplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowell.

FRANTICK. adj. [corrupted from phrenetick, phreneticus, Latin; φρενητικός.]

1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and turbulently mad.

The freckled trout to take

With filken worms. Drayton's Cynthia.

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,

Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shakspeare's Henry v.

Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,

Spotted over like a leopard;

And thy freckled neck display'd,

Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift.

FRE'CKLY. adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.

FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstole, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.

FREE. adj. [freah, Saxon; vry, Dutch.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependant.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any condition of subjection. Temple.

Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains?
Dryden.

How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:

Free, to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior.

Set an unhappy pris'ner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakspeare.

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not indifferent. South.

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have given sincere

Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would? Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free,
I'll the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree. Pope.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!

Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

Physicians are too free, upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple.
The criticks have been very free in their censures. Felton.

I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults. Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Castilio, I have doubts within my heart;

Will you be free and candid to your friend?

Oswald's Orphan.

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.

'Tis not to make me jealous;

To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,

Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shakspeare's Othello.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter. Hakewill on Providence.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious: with of.

Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens;
O'erchanging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakspeare.

No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as other spare. Pope.

Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon.

10. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shakspeare's King Lear.

11. Guiltless; innocent.

Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryden.

12. Exempt: with of anciently; more properly from.

These

Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denham.

Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

The will free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.

What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end

Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?

Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea? Dryden.

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free-school.

TO FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence

Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of,

If any be the trespass of the queen. Shakspeare.

He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac.

Can'st thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand? Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,

And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniencies the passions of those meetings gave him than to dissolve them. Clarendon.

Heracles

Freed Erymar thus from the foaming boar. Dryden.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed. Dryden's Virgil.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.

The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.

Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover freed his way. Dryden.

This master-key

Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again

Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights;
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakspeare.

Never any Sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.

5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Romans.

FREEBO'OTER. n. f. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen. Clarendon.

FREEBO'OTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FREEBORN. n. f. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world! Dryden.

I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden's Aeneid, Dedication.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREECHA'PPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Corwell.

FREECOST. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South.

FRE'EDMAN. n. f. [freed and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be preserr'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden.

FRE'EDOM. n. f. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryd.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakspeare.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Maccabees.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always chusing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

FREEFO'OTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freefooted. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

FREEHE'ARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;
And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.

FREEHO'LD. n. f. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holds in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposite to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or foreland, that is, holden, without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Corwell.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addis.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FREENO'LDER. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FRE'ELY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependance.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains

I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Ascham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wise;
But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings; they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosoms of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FRE'EMAN. n. f. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakspeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worst, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,
What nature did like captives treat before. Dryd.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison.

FREEM'NDED. adj. [free and mind.]

Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FRE'ENESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuoufness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Spratt.

FREESCHO'OL. n. f. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one free-school at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small free-school; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN. adj. [free and spoken.]

Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courtes as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, as if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freespoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FRE'ESTONE. n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakspeare.

F R E

F R E

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison.

FREETHINKER. n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion. Atheist is an old-fashioned word: I'm a free-thinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against christianity? and therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWILL. n. f. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate. We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.
2. Voluntariness; spontaneity. I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Exra.

FREEWOMAN. n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved. All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. I Maccabees.

To FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [vriesen, Dutch.]

2. To be congealed with cold. The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed. Orpheus with his lute made trees And mountain tops, that freeze, Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakspeare.

Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal, And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

To FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.
2. To kill by cold. When we both lay in the field, Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me, Ev'n in his garments! Shakspeare. Richard III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakspeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion. I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins, That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakspeare.

Death came on amain, And exercis'd below his iron reign; Then upward to the seat of life he goes; Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

To FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. fraught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation. The princes Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Fraught with the ministers and instruments Of cruel war. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, Prol.

Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these, Who freights a ship to venture on the seas; With one frail interposing plank to save From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden's Juvenal.

Freighted with iron, from her native land I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To load as the burden; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted. I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and The freighting souls within her. Shakspeare.

FREIGHT. n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded. He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight; The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden.
2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. f. [fretteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. f. A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

But now from me his madding mind is start, And woos the widow's daughter of the glen; And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart, So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser.

FRENCH Chalk. n. f. An indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as steatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

To FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb. They disliked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

Has he familiarly disliked Your yellow starch, or said your doublet Was not exactly Frenchified? Shakspeare.

FRENETICK. adj. [frenetique, French; frenetick, generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted. He himself impotent, By mean of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.

FRENZY. n. f. [phrenitis; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetisy, phrenetisy, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness. That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits, That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides; All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison.

Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bentley.

FRE'QUENCE. n. f. [frequence, French; frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly. The frequence of degree, From high to low throughout. Shakspeare.

He, in full frequence bright Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Milton.

FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done. Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally entitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle: its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterbury.

2. Concourse; full assembly. Thou cam'st ere while into this senate: who Of such a frequency, so many friends And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? Ben Jonson's Catiline.

FRE'QUENT. adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring. The frequent these times are, the better. Duty of Man.
- An ancient and imperial city falls; The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden.
- Frequent* herles shall besiege your gates. Pope.
2. Used often to practise any thing. The christians of the first times were generally frequent in the practice of it. Duty of Man.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.

3. Full of concourse. Frequent and full. Milton.

To FRE'QUENT. v. a. [frequentio, Latin; frequenter, French.] To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to. They in latter day, Finding in it fit ports for fisher's trade, 'Gan more the same frequent, and further to invade. Spenser.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our Saviour himself and the apostles frequented them. Hooker.

This fellow here, this thy creature, By night frequents my house. Shakspeare. Timon.

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent; And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden.

FRE'QUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Conversable; accessible. Not now used, but not inelegant. While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney.

FRE'QUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FRE'QUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place. Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches. Swift.

FRE'QUENTLY. adv. [frequenter, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; a considerable number of times; manifold times. I could not, without much grief; observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers. Swift.

FRE'SCO. n. f. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning. Hellish sprites Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.
2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk. Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye; A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

FRESH. adj. [frerc, Saxon; fraische, French.]

1. Cool; not vapid with heat.

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the freshet spring.

Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No borrow'd bays his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryd.

4. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right, Shall lead their lives. Milton's Par. Lost.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresh date will longer stay. Dryden.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh like flowers in waters. Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milton.

Think not, 'cause men flatter ring say,
Y' are fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so. Carew.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryd.
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryden.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies she long; but as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryd.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him;
take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon's Holy War.

Two swains
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me
Hast thou beheld a fresh gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakspeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to her grave. Harvey on Consumptions.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison's Spectator.

10. Brisk; strong; vigorous.

As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship. Holder.

11. Fasting: opposed to eating or drinking.

A low word.

12. Sweet: opposed to stale or stinking.

FRESH. n. f. Water not salt.

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him
Where the quick freshes are. Shakspeare.

To FRESHEN. v. a. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Preclusive drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson's Spring.

To FRESHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.

A freshening breeze the magick power supply'd,
While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide.

Pope's Odyssey.

FRESHET. n. f. [from fresh.] A pool of fresh water.

All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet or purling brook, or shell or fin. Milton.

FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakspeare's Henry v.

They are now freshly in difference with them. Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled? Shakspeare.

FRESHNESS. n. f. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidness.

Most odorous smell best broken or crushed;
but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness
and sweetness of their odour. Bacon.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind;
for surely no man was ever weary of thinking, that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of summer; but they be but pennings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, the hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air. Addis.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Granville.

6. Freedom from saltiness.

FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.]

Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatize those who come first to sea as freshwater men or novices.

Those nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Knolles' History of the Turks.

FRET. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from φρεζαν, to eat; others from φρεζπαν, to adorn; some from φρετρο; Skinner more probably from fremo, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage. Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of heterogeneous mixtures. Derham.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and, in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon's Natural History.

The harp
Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice Choral or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew's Cosmolog. Sac.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon's Natural History.

We take delight in a prospect well laid out,
and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret works of rocks and grottos. Spectator.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets,
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
The incredulous Pheac, having yet
Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fret. Tate's Juvenal.

You, too weak, the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Creech's Juvenal.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope.

To FRET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakspeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakspeare's Richard II.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.

Before I ground the object metal on the pitch,
I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, 'till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton's Opticks.

3. To hurt by attrition.

Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shakspeare.

4. To corrode; to eat away.

It is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without. Levitius.

The painful husband, plowing up his ground, Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields,
And empty helms under his harrow sound. Hakewill.

5. To form into raised work.
Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton.

6. To variegate; to diversify.
Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.
Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

7. To make angry; to vex.
The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast, and they that over-ween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and truth.
Milton.

Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I will recompence thy way upon thine head. Ezekiel.

Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass: therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.

Injuries from friends fret and gall more,
and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

To FRET. v. n.

1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.
No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabolical rancour, that frets and ferment in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out in slander and invective. South.

Th' adjoining brook, that purls along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool.
Thomson's Summer.

2. To be worn away; to be corroded.
Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin,
and put your gold therein, with sal armoniack, binding it close, and than hang it up: the sal armoniack will fret away, and the gold remain behind. Peacham on Drawing.

3. To make way by attrition or corrosion.
These do but indeed scrape off the exuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very feldom used to soft wood. Moxon.
It inflamed and swelled very much; many wheals arose, and fretted one into another with great excoriation. Wiseman.

4. To be angry; to be peevish; to vex himself.

They trouble themselves with fretting at the ignorance of such as withstand them in their opinion. Hooker.

We are in a fretting mind at the church of Rome, and with angry disposition enter into cogitation. Hooker.

Helpless, what may it boot
To fret for anger, or for grief to moan!
Fairy Queen.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.
Shakspeare's Henry v.

Be lion-mettled, proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

His heart fretted against the Lord. Proverbs.
Hudibras fretting
Conquest should be so long a getting,
Drew up his force. Hudibras.

He swells with wrath, he makes outrageous moan,
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground. Dryden.

How should I fret to mangle ev'ry line,
In rev'ence to the sins of thirty-nine. Pope.

FRET'FUL. adj. [from fret.] Angry;
peevish; in a state of vexation.

Thy knotty and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine. Shaksp.
Where's the king?

—Contending with the fretful elements;
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea. Shaksp.

VOL. I.

They are extremely fretful and peevish, never well at rest; but always calling for this or that, or changing their posture of lying or sitting.
Harvey on Consumptions.

Are you positive and fretful?
Heedless, ignorant, forgetful? Swift.

FRET'FULLY. adv. [from fretful.] Pee-vishly.

FRET'FULNESS. n. f. [from fretful.] Passion; peevishness.

FRET'TY. adj. [from fret.] Adorned with raised work.

FRIABILITY. n. f. [from friable.] Capacity of being easily reduced to powder.

Hardness, friability, and power to draw iron,
are qualities to be found in a loadstone. Locke.

FRIABLE. adj. [friable, French; fri-abilis, Latin.] Easily crumbled; easily reduced to powder.

A spongy excrescence groweth upon the roots of the laser-tree, and sometimes on cedar, very white, light, and friable, which we call agarick.
Bacon's Natural History.

The liver, of all the viscera, is the most friable, and easily crumbled or dissolved. Arbuth.

FRIAR. n. f. [A corruption of frere, French.] A religious; a brother of some regular order.

Holy Franciscan friar! brother! ho! Shaksp.
All the priests and friars in my realm,
Shall in procession sing her endless praise. Shaksp.
He's but a friar, but he's big enough to be a pope. Dryden.

Many jesuits and friars went about, in the disguise of presbyterian and independant ministers, to preach up rebellion. Swift.

A friar would need shew his talent in Latin.
Swift.

FRIARLIKE. adj. [from friar.] Monastick; unskilled in the world.

Their friarlike general would the next day make one holyday in the christian calendars, in remembrance of thirty thousand Hungarian martyrs slain of the Turks. Knolles.

FRIARLY. adj. [friar and like.] Like a a friar, or man untaught in life.

Seek not proud riches, but such as thou may'st get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly; yet have no abstract nor fri-arly contempt of them. Bacon's Essays.

FRIARSCOWL. n. f. [friar and cowl.] A plant. It agrees with arum, from which it differs only in having a flower resembling a cowl.

FRIARY. n. f. [from friar.] A monastery or convent of friars.

FRIARY. adj. Like a friar.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow when he had sweetly invented to signify his name, St.
Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field.
Camden's Remarks.

To FRIBBLE. v. n. To trifle.

Though cheats, yet more intelligible
Than those that with the stars do fribble. Hulib.

FRI'BBLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A trifler.

A fribbler is one who professes rapture for the woman, and dreads her consent. Spectator.

FRICASSE'E. n. f. [French.] A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,
Their stinking cheese, and fricaty of frogs!
He'd raise no fables, sing no flagrant lye,
Of boys with custard choak'd at Newberry.
King.

FRICA'TION. n. f. [fricatio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle frication draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this frication I wish to be done in the morning. Bacon's Natural History.

Resinous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most thereof without frication, as good hard wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone.
Brown.

FRICTION. n. f. [friction, French; frictio, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction,
percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion?
Newton's Opticks.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloths.

Frications make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY. n. f. [friggædag, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.

As she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakspeare.

For Venus like her day, will change her cheer,
And seldom shall we see a Friday clear. Dryden.

FRIEND. n. f. [vriend, Dutch; freond, Saxon.] This word, with its derivatives, is pronounced friend, friendly: the i totally neglected.

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: opposed to foe or enemy.

Friends of my soul, you twain
Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain.
Shakspeare.

Some man is a friend for his own occasion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble. Eccles.

God's benison go with you, and with those That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shakspeare.

Wonder not to see this soul extend
The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend.
Dryden.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes so fast in silence of the night?

—A friend.

—What friend? your name? Shakspeare.

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregularly in the plural number.

He's friends with Cæsar,
In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free. Shakspeare.

My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind

Was then scarce friends with him. Shakspeare.

If she repent, and would make me amends,
Bid her but send me hers, and we are friends.
Carew.

4. An attendant, or companion.

The king ordains their entrance, and ascends
His regal seat, surrounded by his friends. Dryd.

5. Favourer; one propitious.

Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her swiftness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions. Peacham.

6. A familiar compellation.

Friend, how camest thou in hither? Mat.

What supports me, do'st thou ask?
The conscience, friend, t' have lost mine eyes o'er-erply'd

In liberty's defence. Milton.

To FRIEND. v. a. [from the noun.] To favour; to befriend; to countenance; to support.

I know that we shall have him well to friend.
Shakspeare.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That, for the fault's love, is th' offender friended.
Shakspeare.

FRI'ENDED. adj. Well disposed; inclined to love.

Not friended by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends. Shakspeare.

FRIENDLESS. adj. [from friend.]

1. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance; destitute; forlorn.
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Woe to him that is alone, is verified upon none so much as upon the friendless person.
South.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue fly. Dryden.
To what new clime, what distant sky,
Forsaken, friendless, will ye fly. Pope.

2. FRIENDLESS Man. The Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw, because he was, upon his exclusion from the king's peace and protection, denied all help of friends.

FRIENDLINESS. n. f. [from friendly.]

1. A disposition to friendship.
Such a liking and friendliness as hath brought forth the effects. Sidney.

2. Exertion of benevolence.
Let all the intervals be employed in prayers, charity, friendliness and neighbourhood, and means of spiritual and corporal health. Taylor.

FRIENDLY. adj. [from friend.]

1. Having the temper and disposition of a friend; kind; favourable; benevolent.
They gave them thanks, desiring them to be friendly still unto them. 2 Mac.

Thou to mankind
Be good, and friendly still, and oft return!
Milton.

How art thou
To me so friendly grown above the rest
Of brutal kind? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Let the Nassau-star in rising majesty appear,
And guide the prosp'rous mariner
With everlasting beams of friendly light. Prior.

2. Disposed to union; amicable.
Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope.

3. Salutory; homogeneal.
Not that Nepenthe, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst. Milton.

FRIENDLY. adv. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness; amicably.

Here between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity. Shakspeare.

FRIENDSHIP. n. f. [vriendschap, Dutch.]

1. The state of mind united by mutual benevolence; amity.

There is little friendship in the world; and least of all between equals, which was wont to be magnified: that that is between superior and inferior, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.

My sons, let your unseemly discord cease,
If not in friendship, live at least in peace.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

3. Favour; personal kindness.

His friendships, still so few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind. Swift.
Raw captains are usually sent only preferred by friendship, and not chosen by sufficiency. Spenser.

4. Assistance; help.

Gracious, my lord, hard-by here is a hovel:
Some friendship will it lend you against the tempest;
Repose you there. Shakspeare's King Lear.

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FRIEZE. n. f. [drap de frise, French.]
A coarse warm cloth, made perhaps first in Friesland.

If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse, Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,

The All-giver would be unthank'd. Milton.
The captive Germans of gigantick size,
Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frieze.

Dryden's Persius.
He could no more live without his frieze coat than without his skin. Addison's Guardian.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frieze;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

FRIEZE. } n. f. [In architecture.] A

FRIZE. } large flat member which sepa- rates the architrave from the cornice; of which there are as many kinds as there are orders of columns. Harris.

No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of 'vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant-bed, and procreant cradle.
Shakspeare.

Nor did there want
Cornice or frieze with bossy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Par. Lost.
Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for friezes. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FRIEZED. adj. [from frieze.] Shagged or napped with frieze.

FRIEZELIKE. adj. [frieze and like.] Resembling a frieze.

I have seen the figure of Thalia, the comick muse, sometimes with an entire headpiece and a little friezelike tower, running round the edges of the face, and sometimes with a mask for the face only. Addison on Italy.

FRI'GAT. n. f. [frigate, French; fregata, Italian.]

1. A small ship. Ships under fifty guns are generally termed frigats.

The treasure they fought for was, in their view, embezzled in certain frigats. Raleigh's Apology.
On high-raised decks the haughty Belgians ride,
Beneath whose shades our humble frigats go.
Dryden.

2. Any small vessel on the water.

Behold the water work and play
About her little frigate, therein making way.
Fairy Queen.

FRIGEFAC'ION. n. f. [frigus and facio,
Latin.] The act of making cold.

To FRIGHT. v. a. [frighzan, Saxon.]

To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt; to dismay.
This was in the old authors more frequently written affright, as it is always found in the Scripture.

The herds
Were strongly clam'rous in the frightened fields.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Such a numerous host Fled not in silence through the frightened deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion was confounded. Milton.

Cherubic watch, and of a sword that flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.
Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit,
With innocence guarded,
With virtue rewarded,
I make of my sufferings a merit. Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.

Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations. Thomson's Autumn.

FRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden terror.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.

To FRIGHTEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infest the wood. Prior.

FRIGHTFUL. adj. [from fright.]

1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terror.
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,
Thy schooldays frightful, desprate, wild, and furious. Shakspeare.

Without aid you durst not undertake.
This frightful passage o'er the stygian lake.
Dryden.

2. A cant word among women for any thing unpleasing.

FRIGHTFULLY. adv. [from frightful.]

1. Dreadfully; horribly.
This will make a prodigious mass of water, and looks frightfully to the imagination; 'tis huge and great. Burnet.

2. Disagreeably; not beautifully. A woman's word.

Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,
Don't I look frightfully to-day? Swift.

FRIGHTFULNESS. n. f. [from frightful.]
The power of impressing terror.

FRIGID. adj. [frigidus, Latin.]

1. Cold; wanting warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.

In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables.
Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

2. Wanting warmth of affection.

3. Impotent; without warmth of body.

4. Dull; without fire of fancy.
If justice Phillip's costive head
Some frigid rhymes disburles,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

FRIGIDITY. n. f. [frigiditas, Latin.]

1. Coldness; want of warmth.

2. Dulness; want of intellectual fire.
Driving at these as at the highest elegancies,
which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown.
Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon
phrenzy than frigidity. Pope.

3. Want of corporeal warmth.

The boiling blood of youth hinders that serenity which is necessary to severe intenseness; and the frigidity of decrepit age is as much its enemy, by reason of its dulling moisture. Glauville.

4. Coldness of affection.

FRIGIDLY. adv. [from frigid.] Coldly;
dully; without affection.

FRIGIDNESS. n. f. [from frigid.]

Lurana is a frippery of bankrupts, who fly thither from Druina to play their after-game. Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. Old clothes; caſt drefſes; tattered rags.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,

Whoſe works are ev'n the frippery of wit;

From brocage is become ſo bold a thief,

As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. Ben Jonſon.

The fighting-place now ſeamens rage ſupply,

And all the tackling is a frippery. Donne.

Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London,

where old cloaths and frippery are ſold. Pope.

To FRISK. v. n. [frizzare, Italian.]

1. To leap; to ſkip.

Put water into a glaſs, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glaſs, preſſing it ſomewhat hard; and after drawing it ſome few times about, it will make the water frisk and ſprinkle up in a fine dew. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

The fiſh ſell a frisking in the net. L'Eſtrange.

Whether every one hath experimented this troubleſome intrusion of ſome frisking ideas, which thus importune the underſtanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.

2. To dance in frolick or gayety.

We are as twin'd lambs, that did frisk i' th' fun, And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd, Was innocence for innocence; we knew not The doctrine of ill-doing. Shaks. Winter's Tale.

About them frisking play'd

All beaſts of th' earth. Milton's Paradise Loſt.

A wanton heifer frisked up and down in a meadow, at eaſe and pleaſure. L'Eſtrange.

Watch the quick motions of the frisking tail,

Then ſerve their fury with the ruſhing male. Dryden's Virgil.

So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,

And beaſts in gambols frisk'd before their honeſt god. Dryden.

Oft to the mountains airy tops advanc'd,

The frisking ſatyrs on the ſummits danc'd. Addiſ.

Thoſe merry blades,

That frisk it under Pindus' ſhades. Prior.

Peg faints at the ſound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noiſe of a bagpipe. Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of John Bull.

Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's iſle,

To catch a monkey by a wile,

The mimick animal amuſe;

They place before him gloves and ſhoes;

Which when the brute puts aukward on,

All his agility is gone:

In vain to frisk or climb he tries;

The hunters ſeize the grinning prize. Swift.

FRISK. n. f. [from the verb.] A frolick; a fit of wanton gayety.

FRI'SKER. n. f. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not conſtant or ſettled.

Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;

Now I will wear I cannot tell what:

All new faſhions be pleaſant to me:

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;

What ſhould I do but ſet cock on the hoop? Camden.

FRI'SKINESS. n. f. [from frisk.] Gayety; livelineſs. A low word.

FRI'SKY. adj. [frisque, French; from frisk.] Gay; airy. A low word.

FRITH. n. f. [fretum, Latin.]

1. A ſtrait of the ſea where the water, being confined, is rough.

What deſp'rate madman then would venture o'er,

The frith, or haul his cables from the ſhore? Dryden's Virgil.

Batavian fleets

Defraud us of the glittering finny ſwarms

That heave our friths, and crowd upon our ſhores. Thomſon.

2. A kind of net. I know not whether this ſenſe be now retained.

The Wear is a frith, reaching through the Oſe, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod with an eye hook; where the fiſh entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are ſtopt from iſſuing out again. Carew.

FRI'TILLARY. n. f. [fritillaire, French.] A plant. Miller.

FRI'TINANCY. n. f. [from fritinio, Latin.] The ſcream of an inſect, as the cricket or cicada.

The note or fritinancy thereof is far more thrill than that of the locuſt, and its life ſhort. Brown.

FRI'TTER. n. f. [friture, French.]

1. A ſmall piece cut to be fried.

Maids, fritters and pancakes ynow ſee ye make;

Let ſlut have one pancake for company ſake. Tuſſer.

2. A fragment; a ſmall piece.

Senſe and putter I have I lived to ſtand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of Engliſh. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

If you ſtrike a ſolid body that is brittle, as glaſs or ſugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into ſhivers and fritters; the motion, upon the preſſure, ſearching all ways, and breaking where it findeth the body weakeſt. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The ancient errant knights

Won all their ladies hearts in fights;

And cut whole giants into fritters,

To put them into amorous twitters. Hudibras.

3. A cheeſecake; a wig. Ainſworth.

To FRI'TTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut meat into ſmall pieces to be fried.

2. To break into ſmall particles or fragments.

Joy to great chaos! let diſſiſion reign!

My racks and tortures ſoon ſhall drive them hence,

Break all their nerves, and fritter all their ſenſe. Pope's Dunciad.

How prologues into prefaces decay,

And theſe to notes are fritter'd quite away. Dunciad.

FRIVOLOUS. adj. [frivulus, Latin; frivole, French.] Slight; trifling; of no moment.

It is frivolous to ſay we ought not to uſe bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and preſume all ſuch bad as it pleaſeth themſelves to diſlike. Hooker.

Theſe ſeem very frivolous and fruitleſs; for,

by the breach of them, little damage can come to the commonwealth. Spencer.

She tam'd the brinded lionels,

And ſpotted mountain pard; but ſet at nought

The frivolous bolt of Cupid. Milton.

Thoſe things which now ſeem frivolous and ſlight,

Will be of ſerious conſequence to you,

When they have made you once ridiculous. Roſcommon.

All the impeachments in Greece and Rome agreed in a notion of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever perſon they impeached, however frivolous the articles or however weak the proofs. Swift.

I will not defend any miſtake, and do not think myſelf obliged to answer every frivolous objection. Arbuthnot.

FRIVOLOUSNESS. n. f. [from frivolous.] Want of importance; triflingneſs.

FRIVOLOUSLY. adv. [from frivolous.] Triflingly; without weight.

Therein I ſpy'd this yellow frizled hair. Gay.

FRIZLER. n. f. [from frizle.] One that makes ſhort curls.

FRO. adv. [of ƿra, Saxon.]

1. Backward; regreſſively. It is only uſed in oppoſition to the word to; to and fro, backward and forward, to and from.

The Carthaginians having ſpoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans;

and the Romans, having recovered that country,

did cut off all that favoured the Carthaginians:

ſo betwixt them both, to and fro, there was ſcarce

a native Spaniard left. Spencer.

As when a heap of gather'd thorns is caſt,

Now to, now fro, before th' autumnal blaſt,

Together clung, it rolls around the field. Pope.

2. It is a contraction of from: not now uſed.

They turn round like grindleſtones,

Which they dig out fro' the delves,

For their bairns bread, wives and ſelves. Ben Jonſon.

FROCK. n. f. [froc, French.]

1. A drefs; a coat.

That monſter, cuſtom, is angel yet in this,

That to the uſe of actions fair and good,

He likewiſe gives a frock or livery,

That aptly is put on. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

FRO'LUCK. adj. [vrolijck, Dutch.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We fairies, that do run

By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolick. Shakspeare.

Whether, as some fages sing,
The frolick wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a maying;
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,
Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire. Milton.

Who ripe, and frolick of his full-grown age,
Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,
At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milt.

The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Waller.

FRO'LUCK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity.

He would be at his frolick once again,
And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommon.

Alcibiades, having been formerly noted for the like frolicks and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.

While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er
Her frolicks, and pursues her tail no more. Swift.

To Fro'LUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gayety.

Manly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, nor frolicks with the caprices of a frothy imagination. Glanville.

Then to her new love let her go,
And deck her in golden array;
Be finest at every fine show,
And frolick it all the long day. Rowe.

FRO'LUCKLY. adv. [from frolick.] Gayly; wildly.

From high Meonia's rocky shores I came,
Of poor descent; Acetes is my name. Addison.

11. Because of: noting the reason or motive of an act or effect.

You are good, but from a nobler cause;
From your own knowledge, not from nature's laws. Dryden.

David celebrates the glory of God from the consideration of the greatness of his works. Tillotson.

We sicken soon from her contagious care;
Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Prior.

Relaxations from plenitude is cured by spare diet, and from any cause by that which is contrary to it. Arbutnot on Aliments.

12. Out of: noting the ground or cause of any thing.

By the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakspeare.

They who believe that the praises which arise from valour are superiour to those which proceed from any other virtues, have not considered. Dryden's Virgil's Æneid, Dedication.

What entertainment can be raised from so pitiful a machine? We see the success of the battle from the very beginning. Dryden.
'Tis true from force the strongest title springs,
I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.

13. Not near to: noting distance.

His regiment lies half a mile at least
South from the mighty power of the king. Shakspeare's Richard III.

14. Noting separation or recession.

To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race, and, panting, scarcely bear
Th' extremes of sev'rish hope and chilling fear. Dryden's Virgil.

15. Noting exemption or deliverance.

From jealousy's tormenting strife,
For ever be thy bosom free'd. Prior.

16. Noting absence.

Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Their train proceeding on their way,
From far the town and lofty tow'rs survey. Dryden.

27. FROM high.

Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high. Dryden.

28. FROM thence. Here from is superfluous.

In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interest; and from hence have always risen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations. Clarendon.

29. FROM whence. From is here superfluous.

While future realms his wand'ring thoughts delight,
His daily vision, and his dream by night,

Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly.

Pope's Statius.

30. FROM where.

From where high Ithaca, o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent woods,

Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope.

31. FROM without.

When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant it with women as well as with men, that it may spread into generations, and not be pierced from without. Bacon.

If native power prevail not shall I doubt
To seek for needful succour from without. Dryd.

32. From is sometimes followed by another preposition, with its proper case.

33. FROM amidst.

Thou too shalt fall by time or barb'rous foes,
Whose circling walls the sev'n fam'd hills enclose;
And thou, whose rival tow'rs invade the skies,
And, from amidst the waves, with equal glory rise.

Addison.

34. FROM among.

Here had new begun
My wand'ring, had not he, who was my guide
Up hither, from among the trees appear'd, Presence divine! Milton's Par. Lost.

seeds

Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden.

Strong god of iron, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north and hyperborean seas, Terror is thine, and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong.

Dryden.

40. FROM out of.

Whatever such principle there is, it was at the first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth.

Hooker.

41. FROM under.

He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame. Milton.

42. FROM within.

The broken bowels, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryden.

FROMWARD. prep. [fram and pearð, Saxon.] Away from: the contrary to the word toward. Not now in use.

As cheerfully going toward as Pyrocles went froward fromward his death. Sidney.

The horizontal needle is continually varying towards east and west; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or fromwards the zenith. Cheyne.

FRONDIFEROUS. adj. [frondifer, Lat.]
Bearing leaves. Dict.

FRONT. n. f. [frons, Latin; front, Fr.]

1. The face.

His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

They stand not front to front, but each doth view.

The other's tail, pursu'd as they pursue.
Creech's Manilius.

The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
Spread on thy front and in thy bosom glow.

Thomson.

2. The face, in a sense of censure or dis- like: as, a hardened front; a fierce front. This is the usual sense.

3. The face as opposed to an enemy.

His forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way

Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce.

Daniel.

4. The part or place opposed to the face.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land: our men had shot, that thundered upon them from the rampier in front, and from the gallies that lay at sea in flank. Bacon.

5. The van of an army.

'Twixt host and host but narrow space was left
A dreadful interval! and front to front Presented, stood in terrible array. Milton.

6. The forepart of any thing, as of a building.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though severally partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front. Bacon.

Palladius adviseth the front of his edifice should so respect the south, that in its first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof.

Brown.

The prince approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch, and on the front above
He fix'd the fatal bough. Dryden's Æneid.

One sees the front of a palace covered with painted pillars of different orders. Addison.

7. The most conspicuous part or particular.

To FRONT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oppose directly, or face to face; to encounter.

You four shall front them in the narrow lane;
we will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us. Shakspeare.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with easy groans. Shakspeare.

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation. Bacon's Essays.

I shall front thee, like some staring ghost,
With all my wrongs about me. Dryden.

2. To stand opposed, or over against any place or thing.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when the statue is erected, and a town house built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison on Italy.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front, but in that file,
Where others tell steps with me. Shakspeare.

FRONTAL. n. f. [frontale, Latin; frontal, French.] Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed among the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks. Quincy.

We may apply intercipts upon the temples of mastick: frontales may also be applied.

Wifeman.

The torpedo, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontals in phrenies. Brown.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.]

In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cuspated, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. f. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRONTED. adj. [from frons.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form. Milton.

FRONTIER. n. f. [frontiere, Fr.] The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border: properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.

Draw all the inhabitants of those borders away, or plant garrisons upon all those frontiers about him. Spenser on Ireland.

I upon my frontiers here keep residence,
That little which is left so to defend. Milton.

FRONTIER. adj. Bordering; conterminous.

A place there lies on Gallia's utmost bounds,
Where rising seas insult the frontier grounds.

Addison.

FRONTISPIECE. n. f. [frontispicium, id quod in fronte conspicitur; frontispice, French.] That part of any building or other body that directly meets the eye.

With frontispiece of diamond and gold
Embellish'd, thick with sparkling orient gems
The portal shone. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Who is it has informed us that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispiece? Locke.

The frontispiece of the townhouse has pillars of a beautiful black marble, streaked with white.

Addison on Italy.

FRONTLESS. adj. [from front.] Not blushing; wanting shame; void of disfidence.

Thee, frontless man, we follow'd from afar,
Thy instruments of death and tools of war. Dryd.

For vice, though frontless, and of harden'd face,
Is daunted at the sight of awful grace. Dryden.

Strike a blush through frontless flattery. Pope.

FRONTLET. n. f. [from frons, Latin;

fronteau, French.] A bandage worn upon the forehead.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet
on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

Deuteronomy.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx. Wifeman.

FRONTROOM. n. f. [front and room.]

An apartment in the forepart of a house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the back-rooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Moxon.

FROME. adj. [bevrozen, Dutch, frozen.]

Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air
Burns frore, and cold performs th' effect of fire.
Milton.

FRORNE. adj. [bevrozen, frozen, Dutch.] Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.
O, my heart-blood is well nigh frorne I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

FROST. n. s. [froort, Saxon.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost.
Pope's Winter.

FROSTBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.]
Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves are too much frostbitten. Mortimer.

FROSTED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold.
Gay.

FROSTILY. adv. [from frosty.]

1. With frost; with excessive cold.

2. Without warmth of affection.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily.
Ben Jonson.

FROSTINESS. n. s. [from frosty.] Cold;
freezing cold.

FROSTNAIL. n. s. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are strait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cosmol.

FROSTWORK. n. s. [frost and work.]
Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew con-gealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze.
Blackmore.

FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shakespeare.

The air, if very very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire
scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat half-starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive.
L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shaksp.

3. Hoary; gray-haired; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shaksp.

FROTH. n. s. [froe, Dan. and Scottish.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy steed. Fairy Queen.

When wind expireth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Natural History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dath'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end.
Milton's Paradise Regained.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters.
Glanville.

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd, Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness.
Newton.

A painter having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth.
Tusser.

TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden.

Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

FROTHILY. adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wasting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy.
Bacon's Natural History.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attend these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by fal-coners for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill.
Skinner.

TO FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. - This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and other timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overfaring frounced head.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Thus, night oft see me in thy pale career,
'Till civil suited morn appear;
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

FROUZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fetid; musty.

Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-coloured red Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FRO'WARD. adj. [frampearb.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse: the contrary to toward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove:

She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shaksp.
Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Proverbs.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon's Essays.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty.
L'Estrange.

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FRO'WARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Pee-vishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly
in the way of his heart. Isaiah.

FRO'WARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.]
Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother?
how many indignities does he pass by?
how many affronts does he put up at our hands?
South.

We'll mutually forget

The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age.
Addison's Cato.

FRO'WER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath.
Tusser.

TO FROWN. v. a. [frogner, old French, to wrinkle. Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shaksp.

They chuse their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet
on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.

—Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shaksp.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,

Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below.
Pope.

FROWN. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour.

Knolles' History of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes

Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command.

Prior.

FRO'WNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?

A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

FRO'WY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gores should yede,

They soon might be corrupted;

Or like not of the frouvy fede,

Or with the weeds be glutted.

Spenser.

FRO'ZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms

Shook Asia's crown with European arms?

Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,

Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea.

Dryden.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth

T' invade the frozen waggon of the north.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire

They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire.

Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair; but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto.

Sidney.

Be not ever frozen coy;

One beam of love will soon destroy

And melt that ice to floods of joy.

Carew.

3. Void of heat or appetite.

Even here, where frozen chastity retires,

Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.

Pope.

F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

Who virtu profess

Shine in the dignity of F. R. S.

Pope.

FRUCTIFEROUS. adj. [fructifer, Latin.]

Bearing fruit.

Ainsworth.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. f. [from fructify.]

The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch tree, hath slender reason to doubt.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To FRUCTIFY. v. a. [fructifier, Fr.]

To make fruitful; to fertilize.

The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth.

Where'er the looks, behold some sudden birth

Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth.

Granville.

To FRUCTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; as serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life.

Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles.

Brown.

FRUCTUOUS. adj. [fructueux, French; from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn

Of interlac'd occur; and both imbibe

Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,

So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound!

Philips.

FRUGAL. adj. [frugalis, Latin; frugal, French.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,

How nature wise and frugal could commit

Such disproportions, with superfluous hand

So many nobler bodies to create,

Greater so manifold to this one use.

Milton.

And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed

With frugal scraps of flesh and massin bread.

Harte.

If through mists he shoots his fullen beams,

Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,

Suspect a drizzling day.

Dryden's Virgil

FRUGALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Pasimond his marriage

press'd,

And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,

To join his brother's bridal with his own.

Dryd.

FRUGALITY. n. f. [frugalité, French; frugalitas, Latin.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink.

Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too.

Those diff'ring virtues, meet in you.

Waller.

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit.

Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

FRUGIFEROUS. adj. [frugifer, Latin.]

Bearing fruit.

Ainsworth.

FRUIT. n. f. [fructus, Latin; frwyth, Welsh; fruit, French.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,

And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best

Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality.

Shaksp.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,

Where they sought knowledge, they did error find.

Davies.

See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,

Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own.

Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth.

Ephesians.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Can't thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute,

When their swollen bellies shall enlarge the fruit?

Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity?

Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him.

Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying.

Sidney.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way.

Proverbs.

FRUITAGE. n. f. [fruitage, French.]

Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees

Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines

Yield nectar.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Greedily they pluck'd

The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd.

Milton.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work?

More.

FRUITBEARER. n. f. [fruit and bearer.]

That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles.

Mortimer.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [fruit and bear.]

Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not.

Mortimer.

FRUITERER. n. f. [fruitier, Fr.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn.

Shakspeare.

Walnuts the fruit'er's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain.

Gay.

FRUITERY. n. f. [fruiterie, French.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oft, notwithstanding all thy care

To help thy plants, on the small fruitery

Exempt from ills, an oriental blast

Disasterous flies.

Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If she continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence.

Sidney.

The earth,

Though in comparison of heav'n, so small,

Nor glist'ring, may of solid good contain

More plenty than the sun that barren shines,

Whose virtue on itself works no effect,

But in the fruitful earth.

Milton.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.

Shakspeare.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddess, hear—a father!

Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend

To make this creature fruitful;

Into her womb convey sterility.

Shakspeare.

Male he created thee, but thy consort

Female for race; then blest'd mankind, and said,

Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the earth;

Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold.

I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful.

Gay.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,

And from Britannia's publick posts retire,

Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,

Through nations fruitful of immortal lays.

Addison.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolifick.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,

And purer fire through universal night

And empty space did fruitfully unite.

Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered.

Shakspeare.

Fruitfully abound.

Dryden.

FRUITFULNESS. n. f. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood.

Raleigh's History.

2. The quality of being prolifick, or bearing many children.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born.
Dryden's Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary; I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

FRUIT-GROVES. n. s. [fruit and groves.]

Shades, or close plantations of fruit-trees.
The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,
To tend the fruitgroves. Pope's Odyssey.

FRUITION. n. s. [fructus, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation. Hooker.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. Shaksp.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorned, could find success;
'Till by fruition, novelty destroyed,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd.
Granville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed. Rogers' Sermons.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To whet our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be, when there. Boyle.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth. Brown.

Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the priests by those words design'd.
Dryden.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless. Raleigh's History.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither,
Fruitless to me, though fruit be here t' excess.
Milton.

The other is for entirely waving all searches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless. Waterland.

3. Having no offspring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And but a barren sceptre in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding. Shaksp.

FRUIT-TIME. n. s. [fruit and time.] The autumn; the time for gathering fruit.FRUIT-TREE. n. s. [fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops.
Shaksp.

They possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance. Nehemiah.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound.
Waller.

Skinner. Ainsworth.

To FRUSH. v. a. [froisser, French.] To break, bruise, or crush. Hammer.

I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shaksp.

FRUSH. n. s. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running toward the heel, in the form of a fork. *Farrier's Dict.*FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [frustra, Latin.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it. More.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindnesses, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour. South.

To FRUSTRATE. v. a. [frustror, Latin; frustrer, French.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.

It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate. Hooker.

I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out Rotten opinion. Shaksp.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.

Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Mil.

2. To make null; to nullify.

The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances. Spenser.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent. Milton.

The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed. Atterbury.

FRUSTRATE. participial adj. [from the verb.]

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

He is drown'd
Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shaksp. Tempest.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian busied in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprize frustrate. Raleigh's History.

All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dry.

2. Null; void.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.

FRUSTRATION. n. s. [frustratio, Latin; from frustrate.] Disappointment; defeat.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse.
South.

FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing. *Ainsw.*FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrate.]

That makes any procedure void; that vacates any former process.
Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal.
Ayliffe.

FRUSTUM. n. s. [Latin.] A piece cut off from a regular figure. A term of science.FRY. n. s. [from froe, foam, Danish. Skinner.]

1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

They come to us, but as love draws;
He swallow us, and never chaws;
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks to die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Danne.

Forthwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,

With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls, that oft Bank the mid-sea. Milton's Parad. Lost.

The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry. L'Estrange.

So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, t' attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way. Dryden.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.

Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern continually supplied and maintained. Spencer.

Them before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens sounding timbrels sung.
Fairy Queen.

Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky. Oldham.

The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt. Collier.

FRY. n. s. A kind of sieve.

He dresseth the dust from malt, by running it through a fan or fry. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FRY. v. a. [frigo, Latin; ffrio, Welsh; fryck, Erse.] To dress food by roasting it in a pan on the fire.To FRY. v. n.

1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.

2. To suffer the action of fire.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden's Aeneid.

3. To melt with heat.

Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phoenix like, in that rich nest they die. Wal.

4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.

Oil of sweet almonds, newly drawn with sugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher; but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it. Bacon's Nat. History.

Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shoar,
That course he steer'd. Dryden's Aeneid.

FRY. n. f. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.

FRY'INGPAN. n. f. [fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is roasted on the fire.

If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the fryingpan into the fire. Howel's Voc. For.

We understand by out of the fryingpan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse.

L'Estrange.

A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street with the twanking of a brass kettle or a fryingpan. Addison.

TO FUB. v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat. It is generally written fob. See Fob.

A hundred mark is a long lone for a poor lone woman to bear! and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fubb'd off and fubb'd off from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. Shaksp. Henry. iv.

FUB. n. f. A plump chubby boy. Ainsw.

FUCATED. adj. [fucatus, Latin.]

1. Painted; disguised with paint.

2. Disguised by false show.

FUCUS. n. f. [Latin.] Paint for the face. Not in use.

Women chat

Of fucus this, and fucus that. Ben Jonson.

Those who paint for debauchery should have the fucus pulled off, and the coarseness underneath discovered. Collier.

TO FUD'DLE. v. a. [of unknown etymology.] To make drunk.

The table floating round,
And pavement faithless to the fuddled feet.

Thomson.

Men will be whoring and fuddling on still.

L'Estrange.

FUEL. n. f. [from feu, fire, French.]

The matter or aliment of fire

This shall be burning and fuel of fire. Isaiah.

This spark will prove a raging fire,
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with.

Shaksp. Henry vi.

Mov'd by my charms, with them your love may cease;

And as the fuel sinks, the flame decrease.

Prior.

TO FUEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed fire with combustible matter.

And yet she cannot waste by this,
Nor long endure this torturing wrong;
For more corruption needful is,
To fuel such a fever long.

Donne.

Never, alas! the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame.

Convey.

The fuel'd chimney blazes wide.

Thomson.

The most malicious surmise was countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician. Wotton.

FUGITIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One who runs from his station or duty.

Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon.

Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy ling'ring. Milton's Parad. Lost.

We understand by some fugitives, that he hath commanded
The generals to return with victory, or expect A shameful death. Denham's Sophy.

2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.

Too many, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives there abiding. Spenser.

Your royal highness is too great and too just, either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.

3. One hard to be caught or detained.

What muse but his can Nature's beauties hit,
Or catch that airy fugitive, call'd wit. Harte.

FUGITIVENESS. n. f. [from fugitive.]

1. Volatility; fugacity.

That divers salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn attending in distillation. Boyle.

2. Instability; uncertainty.

FUGUE. n. f. [French; from fuga, Latin.] In musick, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth, and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harris.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon's Nat. History.

The skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues. Milton on Education.

His volant touch

Instinct through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

FULCIMENT. n. f. [fulcimen, fulcimentum, Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.

The power that equiponderates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it, as there is betwixt their several distances from the centre or fulciment. Wilkins.

TO FULFIL. v. a. [full and fill.]

1. To fill till there is no room for more.

This sense is now not used.

Six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts, Sparre up the sons of Troy. Shaksp. The Trojan chief

2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.

They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Aëts.

The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryden's Aeneid.

3. To answer any purpose or design.

Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Milt.

4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.

If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,
Think for whose sake my breast that wound did bear;
And faithfully my last desires fulfil,
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden.

5. To answer any law by obedience.

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Romans.

This I my glory account

My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou in me well-pleas'd declar'st thy will
Fulfill'd, which to fulfill is all my bliss. Milton.

FULFRAUGHT. adj. [full and fraught.]

Fully stored,

Thy fall hath left a kind of blot

To mark the fulfraught man, the best endu'd,
With some suspicion. Shaksp. Henry v.

FULGENCY. n. f. [fulgens, Latin.] Splendour; lustre; glitter. Diæ.

FULGENT. adj. [fulgens, Latin.] Shining; dazzling; exquisitely bright.

As from a cloud his fulgent head,

And shape star-bright, appear'd. Milton.

The illumination is not so bright and fulgent as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of reason. More's Divine Dialogues.

FULGID. adj. [fulgidus, Latin.] Shining; glittering; dazzling.

FULGIDITY. n. f. [from fulgid.] Splendour; dazzling glitter. Diæ.

FULGOUR. n. f. [fulgor, Latin.] Splendour; dazzling brightness like that of lightning.

Glow-worms alive project a lustre in the dark; which fulgour, notwithstanding, ceaseth after death. Brown.

When I set my eyes on this side of things, there shines from them such an intellectual fulgour, that methinks the very glory of the Deity becomes visible through them. More.

FULGURATION. n. f. [fulguratio, Lat.] The act of lightening.

FULHAM. n. f. A cant word for false dice. Hanmer.

Let vultures gripe thy guts, for gourd and Fulham's hold,
And high and low beguile the rich and poor.

Shakspeare.

FUL'GINOUS. adj. [fuligineux se, French.
fuliginosus, Latin.] Sooty; smoky.

Burrough hath an excellent spirit to repress the fuliginous vapours of dusky melancholy, and so cure madness.

Bacon.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies.

Howel.

FULIMART. n. s. [This word, of which Skinner observes that he found it only in this passage, seems to mean the same with float.] A kind of stinking ferret.

The fitchat, the fulimart, and the ferret, live upon the face, and within the bowels of the earth.

Walton's Angler.

FULL. adj. [fulle, Saxon; vol, Dutch.]

1. Replete; without vacuity; having no space void.

Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travel and vexation of spirit.

Ecclesiastes.

Valley full of chariots.

Isaiah.

The trees of the Lord are full of sap.

Psalms.

Where all must full or not coherent be.

Pope.

2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,

He met her full, but full of warefulness.

Sidney.

You should tread a course

Pretty and full of view.

Shakspeare. Cymb.

Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; they taint business through want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.

Bacon.

That must be our cure,

To be no more; sad cure; for who would lose,

Though full of pain, this intellectual being,

Those thoughts that wander through eternity?

Milton.

Gay religion's full of pomp and gold.

Milton.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,

I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,

Though full of youthful health and pain.

Dryden.

He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compassed about with infirmities which he cannot remove.

Tillotson.

From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his
fire,

And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;

Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,

And frames his goddesses by your matchless charms.

Granville.

3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.

Full of days was he;

Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see.

Tickel.

4. Plump; faginated; fat.

A gentleman of a full body having broken his skin by a fall, the wound inflamed.

Wiseman.

5. Saturated; fated.

I am full of the burnt offerings of rams.

The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object.

Bacon.

6. Crowded with regard to the imagination or memory.

Every one is full of the miracles done by cold baths on decayed and weak constitutions.

Locke.

7. That fills or makes full; large; great in effect.

Water digesteth a full meal sooner than any liquor.

Arbuthnot.

8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.

That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels.

Daniel's Civil War.

What remains, ye gods,

But up and enter now into full bliss?

Milton.

Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered.

Hammond's Practical Catechism.

The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life.

Tillotson.

9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.

At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed.

Genesis.

After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies.

Swift's Directions to the Groom.

10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.

Where my expressions are not so full as his,
either our language or my art were defective;
but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him have left upon my thoughts.

Denham.

Should a man go about with never to set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words so fit and proper, so full and express.

Woodward.

11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the empty vessel makes the greatest sound.

Shakspeare.

Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber,
make all noises in the same more full and resounding.

Bacon's Natural History.

Dryden taught to join

The varying verse, the full resounding line.

Pope.

12. Mature; perfect.

In the sultanry of the Mamalukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers out of their possessions.

Bacon.

So law appears imperfect, and but given
With purpose to resign them in full time
Up to a better covenant.

Milton.

These thoughts

Full counsel must mature.

Milton.

13. [Applied to the moon.] Complete in its orb.

Towards the full moon, as he was coming home one morning, he felt his legs falter.

Wise man's Surgery.

14. Not continuous, or a full stop.

Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty sign.

Sidney.

15. Spread to view in all dimensions.

'Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile.

Addison on Medals.

FULL. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.

When we return,

We'll see those things affected to the full.

He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full.

Clarendon.

The picture of Ptolemy Philopater is given by authors to the full.

Dryden.

Sicilian tortures and the brazen bull,

Are emblems, rather than express the full

Of what he feels.

Dryden's Persius.

If where the rules not far enough extend,

Some lucky licence answer to the full

Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule.

Pope.

2. The highest state or degree.

The swan's down feather,

That stands upon the swell at full of tide,

Neither way inclines.

Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. The whole; the total.

The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy pow'r to encounter you, my lord:

This is the news at full.

But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;

I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Shakspeare.

4. The state of being satiated.

When I had fed them to the full.

Jeremiah.

5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.

Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are fullest in the full of the moon.

Bacon.

FULL. adv.

1. Without abatement or diminution.

He full

Resplendent all his Father manifest

Express'd.

Milton.

In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; which many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin.

Dryden's Dramatick Poesy.

A modest blush she wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart.

Dryden.

The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived.

Dryden's Aurengzebe, Preface.

Since you may

Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,

The pawn I proffer shall be full as good.

Dryden.

2. With the whole effect.

'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it.

Dryden's Discrepancy.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,

This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony,

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,

The diapason closing full in man.

Dryden.

3. Exactly.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,

An arm ariseth of the stygian flood.

Addison.

Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,

A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play.

Addison's Ovid.

4. Directly.

He met her full, but full of warefulness.

Sidney.

He then confronts the bull,

And on his ample forehead aiming full,

The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull.

Dryden.

At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force

Full at the temples of the warrior horse.

Dryden.

5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their fignification.

Tell me why on your shield, so goodly scor'd,

Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?

Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead.

Spenser.

I was set at work

Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking

Either for such men or such business.

Full well ye reject the commandment.

Adam was all in tears, and to his guide

Lamenting turn'd full sad.

You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself.

More.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight.

Dryden.

Full well the god his sister's envy knew,

And what her aims and what her arts pursue.

Dryden.

There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself.

Swift.

FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.

FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blown.]

1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.

My glories are past danger; they're full-blown:
Things, that are blatted, are but in the bud.

Denham's Sophy.

My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryd.

2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.

He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail.

Dryden's Persius.

FULL-BOTTOMED. adj. [full and bottomed.] Having a large bottom.

I was obliged to sit at home in my morning gown, having pawned a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottom'd wig for a sum of money.

Guardian.

FULL-EARED. adj. [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.

As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-ear'd corn, or torrents raging course.

Denham.

FULL-EYED. adj. [full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.

FULL-FED. adj. [full and fed.] Sated; fat; faginated.

All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well bodied air. Pope.

FULL-LADEN. adj. [full and laden.] Laden till there can be no more added.

It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson.

FULL-SPREAD. adj. [full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.

How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that 'gainst stiff gales lavecoring go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too. Dryden.

FULL-SUMMED. adj. [full and summed.] Complete in all its parts.

The cedar stretched forth his branches, and the king of birds nested within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons east and west; but now the eagle is become half naked. Howell's Vocal Forest.

To FULL. v. a. [fullore, Latin.] To cleanse cloth from its oil or grease.

FULLAGE. n. f. [from full.] The money paid for fulling or cleansing cloth.

FULLER. n. f. [fullo, Latin.] One whose trade is to cleanse cloth.

The clothiers have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers. Shaks.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them. Mark.

FULLERS Earth. n. f. A marl of a close texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch: when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees from very pale to almost black, and generally has a greenish cast in it. The finest is dug in our own island. Hill's Mat. Medica.

The fullers earth of England very much exceeds any yet discovered abroad in goodness; which is one great reason why the English surpass all other nations in the woollen manufacture. Woodward.

FULLERS Thistle, or Weed. n. f. [dipsacus.] A plant.

FULLERY. n. f. [from fuller.] The place where the trade of a fuller is exercised.

FULLINGMILL. n. f. [full and mill.] A mill where the water raises hammers which beat the cloth till it be cleansed.

By large hammers, like those used for paper and fullingmills, they beat their hemp. Mortimer.

FULLY. adv. [from full.]

1. Without vacuity.

2. Completely; without lack; without more to be desired.

There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final satisfaction of all such perpetual desires.

Hooker.

He fully possessed the entire revelation he had received from God, and had thoroughly digested it. Locke.

The goddess cry'd

It is enough, I'm fully satisfy'd. Addison.

FULMINANT. adj. [fulminant, French, fulminans, Latin.] Thundering; making a noise like thunder.

To FULMINATE. v. n. [fulminare, Latin; fulminer, French.]

1. To thunder.

I cannot fulminate nor tonitruate words
To puzzle intellects; my ninth lap affords
No Lycophronian buskins. Tho. Randolph.

2. To make a loud noise or crack.

Whilst it was in fusion we cast into it a live coal, which presently kindled it, and made it boil and flash for a pretty while: after which we cast in another glowing coal, which made it fulminate afresh. Boyle.

In damps one is called the suffocating, and the other the fulminating damp. Woodward.

3. To issue out ecclesiastical censures.

To FULMINATE. v. a. To throw out as an object of terror.

As excommunication is not greatly regarded here in England, as now fulminated; so this constitution is out of use among us in a great measure. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FULMINATION. n. f. [fulminatio, Latin; fulmination, French, from fulminate.]

1. The act of thundering.

2. Denunciation of censure.

The fulminations from the vatican were turned into ridicule. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FULMINATORY. adj. [fulmineus, Latin; from fulminate.] Thundering; striking horror.

FULNESS. n. f. [from full.]

1. The state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.

Your heave-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press. Numbers.

Let the sea roar and the fulness thereof. Deut.
To the houses I wished nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom. King Charles.

2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.

3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.

Your enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into congratulations; and congratulating their fulness only with their continuance. South.

4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.

The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclamations and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstration and fulness of the cry. Bacon's Henry VII.

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.

In thy presence is fulness of joy. Psalms.

He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. Shaks.

6. Repletion; satiety.

I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

7. Plenty; wealth.

To lapse in fulness

Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakspeare.

8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon.

9. Largeness; extent.

There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.

10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour of sound.

This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.

FULSOME. adj. [from fulle, Saxon, foul.]

1. Nauseous; offensive.

He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.

How half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Otway.

2. Rank; gross: to the smell.

White satyrion is of a dainty smell, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell. Bacon.

3. Lustful.

He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakspeare.

4. Tending to obscenity.

A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.

FULSOMELY. adv. [from fulsome.] Nauseously; rankly; obscenely.

FULSOMENESS. n. f. [from fulsome.]

1. Nauseousness.

2. Rank smell.

3. Obscenity.

No decency is considered, no fulsomeness is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as dulness can supply it. Dryden.

FUMADO. n. f. [fumus, Latin.] A smoked fish.

Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumadoes. Carew.

FUMAGE. n. f. [from fumus, Latin.] Hearthmoney. Diç.

FUMATORY. n. f. [fumaria, Latin; fumeterre, French.] An herb.

Her fallow leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumatory, Doth root upon. Shakspeare's Henry V.

To FUMBLE. v. n. [fommelen, Dutch.]

1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.

Our mechanick theists will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.

F U M

2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.
Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

3. To play childishly.
I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakspeare's Henry v.

To FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and confign'd kisses to them,

He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shaksp.

His greasy bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony
They told 'em false for fear. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

FUME. n. f. [fumée, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;

But freight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs:
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes.

Shakspeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, or other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.

In winter, when the heat without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South.

Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden.

Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprise,

And its mad fumes in your discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than they have, but in grofs. Bacon.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By the great intercessor; came in sight
Before their father's throne. Milton.

From thence the fuming trail begun to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden's Æn.

Straight hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakspeare.

Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Rescommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben Jonson.

Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

The first fresh dawn than wak'd the gladden'd race,

Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggard sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson's Spring.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:

He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamors ring around. Dryd.

To FUME. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging upon them long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.

2. To perfume with odours in the fire.

She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden.

The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlic, or other unfavoury things, will drive moles out of the ground. Mortimer.

3. To disperse in vapours.

The heat will fume away most of the scent. Mortimer.

FUMET. n. f. The dung of the deer.

FUMETTE. n. f. [French.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.

A haunch of ven'son made her sweat,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.

FUMID. adj. [fumidus, Latin.] Smoky; vaporous.

A crafts and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis. Brown.

FUMIDITY. n. f. [from fumid.] Smokiness; tendency to smoke. Dict.

To FUMIGATE. v. n. [from fumus, Latin; fumiger, French.]

1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.

Would thou preserve thy famish'd family,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To medicate or heal by vapours.

FUMIGATION. n. f. [fumigatio, Latin; fumigation, Fr. from fumigate.]

1. Scents raised by fire.

Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbutnot.

My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:

F U M

F U N

And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden.

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.

FUMINGLY. adv. [from fume.] Angri-ly; in a rage.

That which we move for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker.

FUMITER. n. f. A plant. See FUMATORY.

Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex'd sea; singing aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds. Shakspeare.

FUMOUS. } adj. [fumeux-se, French; from

FUMY. } fume.] Producing fumes.

From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fumy god from out his breast:

Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted 'till the day. Dryden.

FUN. n. f. [A low cant word.] Sport; high merriment; frolicsome delight.

Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
Your bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. Mora.

FUNCTION. n. f. [functio, Latin.]

1. Discharge; performance.

There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.

2. Employment; office.

The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.

You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner the very other debt of your calling. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

Nor was it any policy, or obstinacy, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me. King Charles.

This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her. Addison.

Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury.

3. Single act of any office.

Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort, be executed. Hooker.

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillington.

4. Trade; occupation.

Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakspeare.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.

The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.

6. Power; faculty: either animal or intellectual.

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:

My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton.

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbutnot.

FUND. n. f. [fond, French; fundo, a bag, Latin.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expence is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade, And part employ'd to roll the watry tide. Dryd.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Addison.

FUNDAMENT. n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.

FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Latin, from fundament.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh.

You that will be less fearful than discreet, That love the fundamental part of state, More than you doubt the charge of 't. Shaksp.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul The servile actions of our wav'ring soul, Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will; Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.

Yet some there were among the founder few, Of those who less presum'd, and better knew, Who durst assert the juster ancient cause, And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope.

FUNDAMENTAL. n. f. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.

We propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnable in respect of superfluities and consequences that arise from them. South.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAMENTALLY. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perfectly in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift.

FUNERAL. n. f. [funus, Latin; funerailles, French.]

1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest, Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral. Shaksp.

All things that we ordained festival, Turn from their office to black funeral. Shaksp.

He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac.

No widow at his funeral shall weep. Sandys.

2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long fun'erals blacken all the way. Pope.

You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift.

May he find his funeral

I' th' sands, when he before his day shall fall. Denham.

FUNERAL. adj. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.

Our instruments to melancholy bells, Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast. Shaksp.

Let such honours

And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues Are due, be first perform'd. Denham's Sophy.

Thy hand o'er towns the fun'ral torch displays, And forms a thousand ills ten thousand ways. Dryden.

FUNE'RAL. adj. [funerea, Latin.] Suiting a funeral; dark; dismal.

But if his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight, Inhabitant of deep disastrous night, Homeward with pious speed repairs the main, To the pale shade funereal rites ordain. Pope.

FUNGO'SITY. n. f. [from fungus.] Unsolid excrescence. Diæ.

FUNGIOUS. adj. [from fungus.] Excrescent; spongy; wanting firmness.

It is often employed to keep down the fungous lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the escharotick medicines. Sharp.

FUNGUS. n. f. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrescences of flesh as grow out upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrescence from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agarick from the larch-tree and auriculæ Judæ from elder. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot on Diet.

This eminence is composed of little points, or granula, called fungus, or proud flesh. Sharp.

FUNICLE. n. f. [funiculus, Latin.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.

FUNK. n. f. A stink. A low word.

FUNNEL. n. f. [infundibulum, Latin; whence fundible, fundle, funnel.]

1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them. Ben Jonson.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend, Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackmore.

The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel. Ray.

2. A pipe or passage of communication.

Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.

FUR. n. f. [fourrure, French.]

1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.

December must be expressed with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of capricorn. Peacham on Drawing.

'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him. L'Estrange.

And lordly gout wrapt up in fur, And wheezing asthma, loth to stir. Swift.

2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.

This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf Keep their fur dry, unbonnetted he runs, And bids what will take all. Shaksp. King Lear.

Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with. Ray on the Creation.

3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.

Methinks I am not right in ev'ry part; I feel a kind of trembling at my heart: My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong; Besides a filthy fur upon my tongue. Dryden.

Or claws to seize their furry spoils in fight. Dryd.

FURTHER. adj. [from forth, not from far, as is commonly imagined; forth, further, furtherest, corrupted from forther, fortheft, forðen, Saxon. Forther is used by Sir Thomas More. See FORTH and FARTHER, of which the examples are to be referred to in this word.]

1. At a greater distance.

2. Beyond this.

What further need have we of witnesses.

Matthew.

Satan had journey'd on, pensive and slow;
But further way found none, so thick intwin'd,
As one continu'd brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast that pass'd that way.

Milton.

Their earnest eyes they fix'd, imagining
For one forbidden tree a multitude
Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame.

Milton.

I may meet

Some wand'ring spirit, from him to draw
What further would be learn'd.

Milton.

3. Further has in some sort the force of a substantive in the phrase no further, for nothing further.

Let this appease

Thy doubt, since human reach no further knows.

Milton.

FURTHER. adv. [from forth.] To a greater distance.

And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place.

Numbers.

To FURTHER. v. a. [from the adverb; forðrian, Saxon.] To put onward; to forward; to promote; to countenance; to assist; to help.

Things thus set in order, in quiet and rest,
Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure thee best.

Tusser.

Could their fond superstition have furthered so great attempts without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irresistible force of divine power.

Hooker.

Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked;
further not his wicked device.

Psalms.

This binds thee then to further my design,
As I am bound by vow to further thine.

Dryden.

FURTHERANCE. n. f. [from further.] Promotion; advancement; help.

The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the furtherance of their trade and private business.

Spenser.

Our diligence must search out all helps and furtherances of direction, which scriptures, councils, fathers, histories, the laws and practices of all churches afford.

Hooker.

For gain and work, and success in his affairs,
he seeketh furtherance of him that hath no manner of power.

Hooker.

Cannot my body, nor blood sacrifice,
Intreat you to your wonted furtherance?

Shaksp.

If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and furtherance of it.

Tillotson.

FURTHERER. n. f. [from further.] Promoter; advancer.

That earnest favourer and furtherer of God's true religion, that faithful servitor to his prince and country.

Afham.

FURTHERMORE. adv. [further and more.] Moreover; besides.

This ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so, I pray you, tell him: furthermore,

I pray you, shew my youth old Shylock's house.

Shakspere.

FURTIVE. adj. [furtive, French; furtivus, Latin.] Stolen; gotten by theft.

Or do they, as your schemes, I think, have shown,

Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
All servants to that source of light, the sun?

Prior.

FURUNCLE. n. f. [furuncle, French; furunculus, Latin.] A bile; an angry pustule.

A furuncle is in its beginning round, hard,
and inflamed; and as it increaseth, it riseth up with an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or or ninth day.

Wifeman.

FURY. n. f. [furor, Latin; fureur, Fr.]

1. Madness.

2. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.

I do oppose my patience to his fury; and am arm'd

To suffer with a quietness of spirit

The very tyranny and rage of his.

Shakspere.

He hath given me to know the natures of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts.

Wisdom.

3. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy.

Taking up the lute, her wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice would, in so beloved an occasion, second her wit.

Sidney.

A sybil, that had number'd in the world
The sun to course two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury few'd the work.

Shaksp.

Greater than human kind she seem'd to look,
And with an accent more than mortal spoke;
Her staring eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the god came rushing on her soul.

Dryden's Æneid.

4. [from furia, Latin.] One of the deities of vengeance; and thence a stormy, turbulent, violent, raging woman.

The sight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my soul.

Shakspere.

It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleas'd, when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion.

Addison on Italy.

FURZ. n. f. [furr, Saxon; genista spi-nosa, Latin.] Gorse; goss.

The whole plant is very thorny: the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds.

Miller.

Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
Both timber and furzin, the turf and the cole.

Tusser.

For fewel, there groweth great store of furze,
of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown French.

Carew.

We may know,

And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
Or when to fell the furzes.

Dryden's Virgil.

FURZY. adj. [from furze.] Overgrown with furze; full of gorse.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take,

Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake.

Gay.

To melt; to put into fusion; to liquify
by heat.

To FUSE. v. n. To be melted; to be capable of being liquified by heat.

FUSEE. n. f. [fuseau, French.]

1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist.

Hale.

2. A firelock [from fusil, French]; a small neat musket. This is more properly written fusil.

3. FUSEE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty seven seconds.

Harris.

4. Track of a buck.

Ainsworth.

FUSIBLE. adj. [from fuse.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with, or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones.

Boyle.

FUSIBILITY. n. f. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use.

Wotton.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness.

Locke.

FUSIL. adj. [fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

Some, less skillful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble.

Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Perpetual flames,

O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea.

Philips.

FUSIL. n. f. [fusil, French.]

1. A firelock; a small neat musket.

2. [In heraldry; from fusus, Latin.] Something like a spindle.

middle; in the ancient coat of Montague, argent three fusils in fesse gules. Peachment on Blazoning.

FUSILIER. n. f. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil; a musketeer.

FUSION. n. f. [fusio, Latin; fusion,
French.]

1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames.

Newton's Opt.

F U S

FUSS. n. f. [A low cant word.] A tumult; a bustle.

End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senates keep a fuss:
I submit, and answer thus.

Swift.

FUST. n. f. [fuste, French.]

1. The trunk or body of a column.
2. [from fuste, French.] A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel.

To FUST. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.

FUSTIAN. n. f. [futaine, French; from fuste, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings?

Shakspeare.

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian.

Hudibras.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn.

Dryden.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other.

Dryden.

Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the clofe,
Oft rise to fustian, or descend to prose.

Smith.

FUSTIAN. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Made of fustian.
2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid: used of style.

When men argue, th' greatest part
O' th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument.

Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylvarum, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FUSTIC. n. f. A sort of wood brought from the West Indies, used in dying of cloth.

Diſ.

To FUSTIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Latin.] To beat with a stick; to cane.

Diſ.

FUSTILARIAN. n. f. [from fustly.] A low fellow; a stinkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakspeare only.

Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilarian: I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Henry IV.

F U T

FUSTINESS. n. f. [from fustly.] Mouldiness; stink.

FUSTY. adj. [from fust.] Ill-smelling; mouldy.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Shakspeare.

The fusty plebeians hate thine honours.

Shakspeare.

The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,

From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Shakspeare.

FUTILE. adj. [futile, French; futiles, Latin.]

1. Talkative; loquacious.

One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal.

Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

FUTILITY. n. f. [futilité, French; from futile.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour.

L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects.

Bentley.

FUTTOCKS. n. f. [corrupted from foot books. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FUTURE. adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.

Glory they sung to the Most High! good will To future men, and in their dwellings peace.

Milton.

He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And flings the future people from his hand.

Addison's Ovid.

FUTURE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Shakspeare. Macb.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.

Locke.

FUTURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding;

F Y

neither doth God's aforeknowledge impose any necessity, or bind.

Raleigh.

FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; the condition of being come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no?

South.

FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]

1. Time to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me.

Shakspeare's Othello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron.

Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place.

South.

This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Thou skill'd in fate and dark futurity.

Pope.

3. The state of being to be; futuration.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate, and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas.

Glanville's Scipio.

To FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.

FUZZBALL. n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

FY. interj. [fy, French and Flemish; oiv; vah, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wrecks themselves do now allay.

Spenser.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?

Shakspeare.

A bawd, fir, fy upon him.

Shakspeare.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!

Milton.

Expectance calls thee now another way.
Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?

Dryden.

Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite.

Tatler.

G

G

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard g, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound g retains before a, o, u, l, r; as gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft g, resembles that of j, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of the words before h; as, might. The Saxon g, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GABARDINE. n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabouts.

Shakspeare.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakspeare.
The knight did strait submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he disrob'd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras.

To GA'BBLE. v. n. [gabbare, Italian;
gabberen, Dutch.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like

A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shakspeare.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempest roars,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shoar.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alchouse of my lady's house?

Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudib.
Such a rout, and such a rabble,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GA'BBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shakspeare.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Parad. Lost.

GA'BBLER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater;
a chattering fellow.

GA'BEL. n. f. [gabello, French; gabella, Italian; gafel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil,
wine, and tobacco. Addison on Italy.

GABION. n. f. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and casks filled with sand. Knolles.

GA'BLE. n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gable,
French.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

GAD. n. f. [gād, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick,
a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. It seems to be used by Shakspeare for a style or graver. [from gād, Saxon, a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brags,
And with a gad of steel will write these words.
Shakspeare.

To GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterit of the old word agaan, to go.]
To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent, Shaksp.
Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclus.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echo's moan. Milton.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their stings draw
blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.
Dryden.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.

There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.
No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding.
Locke.

GA'DDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler;
one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclus.

GA'DDINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GA'DFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gād, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about;
the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bacon's Nat. History.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a flight
Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd. Thomson.

GAFF. n. f. A harpoon or large hook.

GA'FFER. n. f. [gafere, companion,
Saxon.] A word of respect, now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.

For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye,
Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay's Past.

GA'FFLES. n. f. [gafelucar, spears, Sax.]

1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.

2. A steel lever to bend crossbows. Ainsw.

To GAG. v. n. [from gaghel, Dutch, the palate, Minsheu.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged.
Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagged and bound. Pope.

GAG. n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,

With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain.
Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.

GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatcht away.
Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shaksp.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shaksp. Rich. 11.

They from their mothers' breasts poor orphans
rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it.
Southern's Oron.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,

Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous
thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gage of its probability. Locke.

2. A measure; a rule of measuring.

One judges, as the weather dictates, right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night;
Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles or parentage. Young.

To GAGE. v. a. [gager, French.]

1. To wager; to depone as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

A moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shaksp. Hamlet.

He found the Turkish merchants making merry: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knolles' History.

2. To bind by some caution or surety; to engage.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts.
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shakspeare.

3. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

We shall see your bearing.

—Nay, but I bar to night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shakspeare.

To GA'GGLE. v. n. [gagen, gagelen,
Dutch.] To make a noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air.
Bacon's Natural History.

May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce.
King.

GA'ILY. adv. [from gay.]

1. Airily; cheerfully.

2. Splendidly. See GAYLY.

GAIN. n. f. [gain, French.]

1. Profit; advantage: contrary to loss.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general consent. Raleigh.
Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain.
Milton.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains;
for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon's Essays.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal, Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.

Folly fights for kings or dives for gain. Pope.

2. Interest; lucrative views.

That, sir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakspeare.

3. Unlawful advantage.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you? 2 Corinthians.

If pride, if envy, if the lust of gain,
If mad ambition in thy bosom reign,
Thou boast'st, alas! thy sober sense in vain. Fitzgerald.

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN. v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Egypt became a gained ground by the muddy and limeous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land. Brown.

He gains, to live as man,
Higher degree of life.
What reinforcement we may gain from hope. Milton.

2. To win; not to lose.

A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king. Milton.

3. To have the overplus in comparative computation.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. To obtain; to procure, to receive.

I acceptance found, which gain'd
This answer from the gracious voice divine. Milton.

That side from small reflection gains
Of glimm'ring air; less vex'd with tempest loud. Milton.

If such a tradition were endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive however it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

For fame with toil we gain, but loose with ease,
Sure some to vex, but never all to please. Pope.

5. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.

I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me. Daniel.

6. To obtain whatever, good or bad.

Ye should not have loosed from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Acts.

7. To win against opposition.

They who were sent to the other pass, after a short resistance, gained it. Clarendon.

Fat fees from the defended Umbrian draws,
And only gains the wealthy client's cause. Dryd.

O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope.

8. To draw into any interest or party.

Come, with presents, laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dryden.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself:

If you gain him, I shall comply of course. A. Philips.

9. To obtain as a wooer.

He never shall find out fit mate, but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake,
Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain
Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse. Milton.

10. To reach; to attain.

The west still glimmers with some streaks of day:

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be tost into the main? Waller.

Sun! sound his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison on Italy.

Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Pheistian shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars. Pope.

II. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.

The court of Hanover should have endeavour'd to gain over those who were represented as their enemies. Swift.

To GAIN. v. n.

1. To grow rich; to have advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions. Ezekiel.

2. To encroach; to come forward by degrees: with on.

When watchful herons leave their watry stand,
And mounting upward with crested flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the fight. Dryden's Virgil.

3. To get ground; to prevail against: with on.

So on the land, while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.

4. To obtain influence with: with on.

The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself. Addison.

GAIN. adj. [An old word now out of use.] Handy; ready; dexterous.

Preface to the Accidence.

GA'INER. n. f. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a clear conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as seeing, if the composition be over-hard, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath. Bacon.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Denham's Sophy

He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange.

By trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of other countries as of our own nation. Addison's Freeholder.

GA'INFUL. adj. [gain and full.]

1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. South.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

Nor knows he merchants gainful care. Dryden.
Mars's muse commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, nor wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels. Philips.

GA'INFULLY. adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS. n. f. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING. n. f. ['gainst and give.]

The same as misgiving; a giving against: as gainsaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting.

It is but foolery; but it is such kind of gain-giving as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

GA'INLESS. adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

GA'INLESSNESS. n. f. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work: miners, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY. adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously. Out of use.

To GA'INSAY. v. a. ['gainst and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gainsay one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gainsay;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

2. To deny any thing.

I never heard yet
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shakspeare's Winter Tale.

GA'INSA'YER. n. f. [from gainsay.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainsayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands. Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainsayers of scripture, even in that which we read for scripture unto the people. Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainsayers. Hammond.

Others sought themselves a name by being his gainsayers, but failed of their purpose. Fell.

'GA'INST. prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that 'gainst ourselves we bore. Dryden.

To GA'INSTAND. v. a. ['gainst and stand.]

To withstand; to oppose; to resist. A proper word, but not in use.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney.

GA'IRISH. adj. [geannian, to dress fine, Saxon.]

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.

Three or four will outrage in apparel, huge hose, monstrous hats, and gairish colours. Ascham.

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was;

A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gairish flath,

To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shakspeare.

There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profane eye may look,
Hide me from day's gairish eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Fame and glory transport a man out of himself; it makes the mind loose and gairish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties. South.

GA'IRISHNESS. n. f. [from gairish.]

1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or gairishness of spirit, but sober, grave, and silent. Taylor.

GAIT. n. f. [gat, Dutch.]

1. A way: as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shakspeare.

2. March; walk.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allurements did forsake. Fairy Queen.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait.
Hubberd's Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait.
Shakspeare.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion.
Clarendon.

A third, who, by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell.
Milton.

Leviathans
Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait.
Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait.
Milton.

GALA'GE. n. f. [gale, French.] A shepherd's clog. Not in use.

My heart-blood is well-nigh frore, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

GALA'NGAL. n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root.

The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste. Hill.

GALA'XY. n. f. [γαλαξία; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Par. Lost.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleaveland.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley.

GALBANUM. n. f. A resinous gum.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops of tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour; its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant. Hill.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Eccles.

GALE. n. f. [gabling, hasty, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?
Shakspeare.

Winds
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells.
Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air. Milton.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

GA'LEATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated echinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing.
Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling a helmet, as the monkshood.

GALERI'ULATE. adj. [from galerus, Lat.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT. n. f. [galiotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three patereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Diñ.

Barbarossa sent two notable pyrates with thirty galiots, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered, and forced again to their galiots.
Knolles' History.

GALL. n. f. [gala, Sax. galle, Dut.]

1. The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers!
Shakspeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakspeare.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies. It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet flavour. Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakspeare.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste!
Shakspeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.
Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people.
Spenser on Ireland.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow. Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [from the verb.]

This is the fatalest wound; as much superiour to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch. Government of the Tongue.

7. [from galla.]

Galls or gallnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have oriental and European galls: the oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation shall be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescencies which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.

To GALL. v. a. [galer, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.
Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain.
Pope's Iliad.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakspeare.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galleth them. Hooker.

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall.
Shakspeare.

All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.

Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.
Dryden's Æneid.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addis.

To GALL. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakspeare.

GALLANT. adj. [galant, French; from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. Isaiah.

The gay, the wife, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.

2. Brave; high-spirited; daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney.

But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth.
Shakspeare.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight. Digby.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd, Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.

Granville.

5. Vitious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins.

Swift.

GA'LLASS. n. f. [galeas, Fr.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. To carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. DiA.

My father hath no less

Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses, And twelve tight gallies.

Shakspeare.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses.

Addison.

GALLE'ON. n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk, or set on fire by the Spanish galleons.

Raleigh's Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles.

Bacon's War with Spain.

GA'LLERY. n. f. [galerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow.

Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers, And goodly galleries fair overlaid.

Spenser.

Your gallery

Have we pass'd through, not without much content.

Shakspeare.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas.

Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led, Not to the foe yet known.

Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them.

Graunt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches.

Addison.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends, And all the thunder of the pit ascends.

Pope.

GA'LLEYLE. n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galleyle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass.

Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GALLEY. n. f. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλιώνης, the swordfish; as others from galleon, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galkeas, galleon, galliot.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load Of ships, hulks, gallies, barks, and brigandines.

Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of gallies, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Lefs in an open boat or kind of galley. Raleigh's History.

On oozy ground his gallies moor;

Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore.

Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the gallies for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure.

South.

GA'LLY-SLAVE. n. f. [galley and slave.]

A man condemned for some crime to row in the gallies.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor men, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy.

Bramhall.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission.

Decay of Piety.

The surges gently dash against the shore, Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar.

Garth.

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself.

Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard.

Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France

That can be with a nimble galliard won:

You cannot revel into dukedoms there.

Shakspeare.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards.

Bacon.

The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the medley of one dance.

Bacon.

GAILLARDISE. n. f. [French.] Merri-ment; exuberant gayety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company.

Brown's Rel. Med.

GA'LLICISM. n. f. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech.

Felton on the Classics.

GA'LLIGASKINS. n. f. [Caliga Gallo-Vasconum, Skinner.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts, By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue, An horrid chasm disclose.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopp'd.

Wifeman's Surgery.

GALLOON. n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GALLOP. v. n. [galoper, French.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Budaus, from καλῶς; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was't come by?

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

His steeds will be restrain'd,

But gallop lively down th' western hill.

Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain

His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen.

Dryden's Virgil.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them.

Sidney.

They 'gan espy

An armed knight toward them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly.

Fairy Queen.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed.

Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun

Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach.

Whom doth time gallop withal?

—With a thief to the gallows.

Shakspeare.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it.

Locke.

GALLOP. n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forward, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

Farrier's Dict.

GALLOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

To GALLOW. v. a. [agælpān, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies

Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,

And make them keep their caves.

Shakspeare.

GALLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the north; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

GALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English fervitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footmen that now weareth a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented.

Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hanmer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,

Is marching hitherward in proud array.

Shaksp.

GALLOW. } n. f. [It is used by some in GALLOWs. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galgo, Goth. gealga, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus furca, Latin; others from גבול high, others from gallu, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from agælpān, the gallows being the great object of legal terrour.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money.

Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowses.

Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

I prophesied if a gallows were on land,

This fellow could not drown.

Shakspeare.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected.

Hayward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of walps while he is upon Tyburn road.

Swift.

GAMBOGE. n. f. A concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a refinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America and the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia.

Hill.

To GAMBOL. v. n. [gambiller, Fr.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolicks.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

Gambol'd before them.

Milton's Par. Lost.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green.

Dryden.

The monsters of the flood

Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,

And heavy whales in awkward measures play.

Pope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madness

That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,

And I the matter will record, which madness

Would gambol from.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

GAMBOL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols.

L'Estrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god.

Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,

With such unsufferable rambles!

Hudibras.

GAMBREL. n. f. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back.

Grew.

GAME. n. f. [gaman, a jest, Islandick.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game.
Shakspeare.

2. Jest: opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,
And crowned her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game.
Spenser.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal, to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities?
Milton.

4. A single match at play.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,
And play the game into each other's hand.
Dryd.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this.
Temple.

7. Field sports: as, the chase, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity.
Shakspeare.
What arms to use, or nets to frame
Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,
With all the myst'ries of that game.
Waller.
Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game,
spied a company of bustards and cranes.
L'Estrange.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous.
Milton.
There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.

A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chase.
Arbutnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we sling, nor ever miss the game.
Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game.
Pope.

Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wife, you rob me of my game.
Young.

9. Solemn contests, exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.
Shakspeare.

Milo, when ent'ring the Olympick games,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came.
Denham.

TO GAME. v. n. [gaman, Saxon.]

1. To play at any sport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.

Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind.
Locke.

GA'ME-CKOCK. n. f. [game and cock.] A cock bred to fight.

They manage the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit.
Locke.

GA'ME-EGG. n. f. [game and egg.] An egg from which a fighting cock is bred.

Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey,
To make the fowl more furious for the fray.
Garth.

GA'ME-KEEPER. n. f. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed.

GA'MESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolick-some; gay; sportive; playful; sportful.

Geron, though old, yet gamesome, kept one end with Cosma.
Sidney.

I am not gamesome; I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.
Shakspeare.
The gamesome wind among her trusses play,
And curleth up those growing riches short.
Fairfax.

Belial, in like gamesome mood.
Milton.

This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained.
Locke.

GA'MESOMENESS. n. f. [from gamesome.]
Sportiveness; merriment.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.] Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. f. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art,
the worse man he is.
Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate.
Dryden's Juvenal.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.
Addison.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels.
Swift.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior.
Law.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentle gamester is the soonest winner.
Shakspeare.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight.
Bacon.

3. A merry frolicksome person.

You're a merry gamester,
My lord Sands.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

4. A prostitute. Not in use.

She's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamester to the camp.
Shakspeare.

GA'MMER. n. f. [of uncertain etymology;
perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer: as, Gammer Gurton's Needle.
An old play.

GA'MMON. n. f. [gambone, Italian.]

1. The buttock of a hog salted and dried;
the lower end of the flitch.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold:
A rusty gammon of some sev'n years old.
Dryd.
Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second stinks.
Dryd.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The founding gammon.
Thomson's Autumn.

GA'MUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort.
Shakspeare.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake,
By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:
Things simply good can never be unfit.
Donne.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire.
Addison.

'GAN, for began, from 'gin for begin.

The noble knight 'gan feel
His vital force to faint.
Spenser.

TO GANCH. v. a. [ganciare, from gancio, a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon hooks, by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Pocockius.

Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis
Gemunt onusti, vel fude trans sinum Luctantur actâ, pendulive Sanguineis trepidant in uncis.
Musæ Angl.

GA'NDER. n. f. [gandja, Saxon.] The male of the goose.

As deep drinketh the goose as the gander.
Camden's Remains.

One gander will serve five geese.
Mortimer.

TO GANG. v. n. [gangen, Dutch;
gangan, Saxon; gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk. An old word not now used, except ludicrously.

But let them gang alone,
As they have brewed, so let them bear blame.
Spenser.

Your flaunting beaux gang with their breasts open.
Arbutnot.

GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

O, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me.
Shakspeare.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell a barking.
L'Estrange.

Admitted in among the gang,
He acts and talks as they befriend him.
Prior.

G'ANGHON. n. f. [French.] A kind of flower.
Ainsworth.

GA'NGLION. n. f. [γαγγλίον.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts.

Bonesetters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint.
Wifeman.

TO GA'NGRENATE. v. a. [from gangrene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Parts cauterized, gangrenated, fiderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction.
Brown.

G'ANGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, French;
gangræna, Latin.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by pu-trefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates.
Bacon.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,
By cutting hope, like a lopt limb, away.
Waller.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene.
Wifeman's Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is festered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: these inflammations will rage to all eternity.
Addison's Spectator.

TO GA'NGRENE. v. a. [gangrener, French; from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently;
for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete.
Bacon.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay.
Dryden.

To GA'NGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out.

GA'NGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbutnot.

GA'NGWAY. n. f. In a ship, the several ways or passages from one part of it to the other. Diã.

GA'NGWEEK. n. f. [gang and week.] Rogation week, when processions are made to lustrate the bounds of parishes. Diã.

GA'NTELOPE. } n. f. [gantlet is only corrupted from gantlope;
GA'NTLET. } gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,

Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,
To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryd.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke.

GA'NZÁ. n. f. [ganfa, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And favour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras.

GAOL. n. f. [geol, Welsh; geole, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakspeare.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open
The gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakspeare.

To GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison; to commit to gaol.

Gaoling vagabonds was chargeable, peltorous, and of no open example. Bacon.

GA'OLDELIVERY. n. f. [gaol and delivery.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to ail,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth of gaol-delivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaol-delivery of souls, not for punishment. South.

GA'OLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steed gaoler is the friend of men. Shaksp.

I know not how or why my furly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes, Put off the brute. Dryden's Cleomenes.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and inured, 'till the death of her gaoler. Tatler.

GAP. n. f. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tuffer's Husbandry.
With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide, Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Bushes are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.
I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it.
Rogers.

2. A breach.

The loss of that city concerned the christian commonweal: manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stoppt.
Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Nor is it any botch or gap in the works of nature. More.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were dissever'd. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other.
Pope.

8. To stop a GAP. To escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quicksets will grow.

His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps.
Swift.

9. To stand in the GAP. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap? Lefley.

GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.]
Having interstices between the teeth.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady priores and the broad speaking gaptoothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

To GAPE. v. n. [geapan, Saxon.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shaksp.

Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbutnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away:
And at each leaf that stirs, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find.
Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train.
Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave: with for.
To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.
Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?
And thou, who gap'st for my estate; draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryd.

4. With after.
What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments? L'Estrange.

5. With at.
Many have gaped at the church revenues; but before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopped in the church-yard. South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father.
Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell,
doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven or the refreshments of a shower.
South.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,

Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,

Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.

That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbutnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on a another for want of a cæsura in this poem. Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my muse can through passages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he.
Rescommon.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape t' anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foresee
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras.

11. To stare with wonder.

Parts of different species jumbled together according to the mad imagination of the dawber; and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd, Betimes retreat. Gay's Trivia.

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth.
Job.

GA'PER. n. f. [from gape.]

1. One who opens his mouth.

2. One who stares foolishly.
 3. One who longs or craves.
 The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon.
Gibson's Camden.

To GAR. v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. Obsolete. It is still used in Scotland.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
 What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
 Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
 Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorn.
Spenser.

GARB. n. f. [garbe, French.]

1. Dress; clothes; habit.
 Thus Belial, with words cloath'd in reason's garb, Counsel'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth.
Milton.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up.
L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of dress.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
 He did not steal, but emulate;
 And when he would like them appear,
 Their garb, but not their cloaths did wear.
Denham.

3. Exterieur appearance.

This is some fellow,
 Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A saucy roughness and constrains the garb
 Quite from his nature.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

GARBAGE. n. f. [garbear, Spanish.] The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,
 That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
 Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb,
 Longs after for the garbage.
Shakspeare.

Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd
 Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
 And prey on garbage.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

A flum more senseless than the rog'ry
 Of old aruspicy and aug'ry,
 That out of garbages of cattle
 Prefag'd th' events of truce or battle.
Hudibras.

Who without aversion, ever look'd
 On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd?
Roscommon.

When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage.
Dryden.

GARBEL. n. f. A plank next the keel of a ship.
Bailey.

GARBIDGE. } n. f. Corrupted from GARBISH. } garbage.

All shavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, blood, and garbidge, is good manure for land.
Mortimer.

In Newfoundland they improve their ground with the garbidge of fish.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARBLE. v. a. [garbellare, Italian.] To sift; to part; to separate the good from the bad.

But you who fathers and traditions take,
 And garble some, and some you quite forsake.
Dryden.

Had our author set down this command, without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him.
Locke.

The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to it.
Cheyne.

GARBLER. n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.

A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it.
Swift's Examiner.

GARBOIL. n. f. [garbouille, French; garbuglio, Italian.] Disorder; tumult; uproar.
Hanmer.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
 What garboils she awak'd.
Shakspeare.

GARD. n. f. [garde, French.] Wardship; care; custody.

GARDEN. n. f. [gardd, Welsh; jardin, French; giardino, Italian.]

1. A piece of ground enclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
 Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next.
Shakspeare.

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holbourn,
 I saw good strawberries in your garden there.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

In the royal ordering of gardens there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year.
Bacon.

In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade and water.
Temple.

My garden takes up half my daily care,
 And my field asks the minutes I can spare.
Harte.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
 The pleasant garden of great Italy.
Shakspeare.

3. GARDEN is often used in composition for hortensis, or belonging to a garden.

4. Garden-mould. Mould fit for a garden.
 They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay.
Mortimer.

5. Garden-tillage. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden-tillage as well as that of the field.
Mortimer.

6. Garden-ware. The produce of gardens.
 A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel.
Mortimer.

To GARDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden; to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,
 When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
 Or garden'd well.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

When ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection.
Bacon.

GARDENER. n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that if we plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will.
Shakspeare.

Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips.
Bacon.

The gardener may lop religion as he pleases.
Howell.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions.
Evelyn.

Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care
 The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear.
Dryden.

GARDENING. n. f. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art.
Spektator.

GARE. n. f. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep.
Diſ.

GARGARISM. n. f. [γάργαρασμος; gargarisme, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with.

Apophlegmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate.
Bacon.

Quincy.

Quincy.

Quincy.

Quincy.

To GARGARIZE. v. a. [γάργαραίζω; gargariser, French.] To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarised, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit.
Bacon.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize.
Holder.

GARGET. n. f. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARGLE. v. a. [gargouiller, French; gargogliare, Italian; gurgel, German, the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxycrate.
Harvey.

The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stop'd by gargling with oxycrate.
Wiseman.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
 Next gargle well their throats.
Dryden's Pers.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long,
 And gargle in their throats a song.
Waller.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat

On nonsense gargl'd in an eunuch's throat,
Fenton.

GARGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure.
Wiseman.

GARGLION. n. f. An exsudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immoveable tumour.

Quincy.

GARGOL. n. f. A distemper in hogs.

The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite.
Mortimer.

GARLAND. n. f. [garlande, guirland, French.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
 A garland made, on temples for to wear;
 For he then chosen was the dignity
 Of village-lord that Whitfuntide to bear.
Sidney.

A reeling world will never stand upright,
 'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.
 —How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?

—Ay, my good lord.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
 She wove, to make a garland for her head.
Dryden.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,
 Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,
 And reign; though she has left the throne,
 Who made thy glory worth thy care.
Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
 And all her faded garlands bloom anew.
Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,
 And call him noble, that was now your hate,
 Him vile, that was your garland.
Shakspeare.

GARLICK. n. f. [gar, Saxon, a lance; and leek, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Allium, Latin.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds.
Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath.
Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.
'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r:
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate.

GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.

This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which, when-ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick. Miller.

GARLICK Wild. n. f. A plant.

GARLICKEATER. n. f. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlickeaters. Shakspeare.

GARMENT. n. f. [guarniment, old French.]

Any thing by which the body is covered; clothes; drefs.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Our leaf once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers. Raleigh.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?
Would'st thou, a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear. Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore. Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed. Addison.

Let him that sues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontesting sufferance of such small losses. Kettlewell.

GARNER. n. f. [grenier, French.] A place in which thrashed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and foyson plenty,
Barns and *garner*s never empty. Shakspeare.

For fundry foes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd.

To GARNER. v. a. [from the noun.]
To store as in *garner*s.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shakf.

GARNET. n. f. [garnato, Italian; grana-tulus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the saphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients; the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple. Woodw.

To GARNISH. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appen-dages.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees. Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnished,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,
VOL. I.

Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew. Spenser.

With taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakspeare.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnished with fruits, delighting both the eye and the taste.
Raleigh.

All the streets were garnished with the citizens, standing in their liveries. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly drest!
Garnish'd with 'sparagus, himself a feast! Dryd.
No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitchcock'd eel.
King's Cookery.

3. To fit with fetters. A cant term.
GARNISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweet,
Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy. Shakspeare.
Matter and figure they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;
They seek to feed and please their guests. Prior.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters. A cant term.

4. Penfucula carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol. Ainsworth.

GARNISHMENT. n. f. [from garnish.]
Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Sancta Guistiniana in Padoua is a found piece of good art, where the materials being ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, ravish the beholders. Wotton.

GARNITURE. n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in furniture of their heads. Government of Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago,

Is lost, without the garniture of show. Granv.
As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison's Spectator.

GAROUS. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish;
whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and olidous separation. Brown.

GARRAN. n. f. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A Highland horse, which, when brought into the north of England, takes the name of galloway.

When he comes forth, he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

Every man would be forced to provide winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease. Temple.

GARRET. n. f. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commission'd by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dryden.
John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:

And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

GARRETER. n. f. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GARRISON. n. f. [garrison, French.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,
Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison.
Sidney.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind. Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies. Spenser on Ireland.

To GARRISON. v. a. [from the noun.]

To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,
Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine.
Dryden's Juvenal.

GARRULITY. n. f. [garrulitas, Lat.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue;
inability to keep a secret.

Let me here
Expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity. Milton's Agonistes.

2. The quality of talking too much;
talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided:
first of all, loquacity or garrulity. Ray.

GARRULOUS. adj. [garrulus, Latin.]
Prattling; talkative.

Old age looks out,
And garrulous recounts the feats of youth.
Thomson.

GARTER. n. f. [gardus, Welsh; jar-tier, French; from gar, Welsh, the binding of the knee.]

1. A string or riband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.

When we rest in our cloaths we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage. Ray.

Handsome garters at your knees. Swift.
There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves. Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.

—The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue. Shakspeare's Richard III.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race. Dryd.

3. The principal king at arms.

To GARTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose. Shakspeare.

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place. Wifeman's Surgery.

GARTH. n. f. [as if girth, from gird.]

The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS. n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses. Harris.

GASCONADE. n. f. [French; from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.

To GASCONADE. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH. v. a. [from hacher, to cut, French. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Hayward.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image requires art. Tillotson.

See me gash'd with knives, Or fear'd with burning steel. Rowe's Royal Conv.

Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,

He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell. A. Philips.

GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large And open gash therein; were not his targe, That broke the violence of his intent, The weary soul from thence it would discharge. Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off. Shaksp. Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lifts; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd, Not long divisible; and from the gash A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd. Milton.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar. Arbutnot.

GA'SKINS. n. f. [from Gasconie. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold; Or, if both break, your gaskins fall. Shaksp.

To GASP. v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gispe, Danish, to sob, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath with labour.

The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden. They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes; But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats. Dryden.

The gasping head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk. Dryden's Æneid.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire; The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dryden.

A scantling of wit lay gasping for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden. The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and gasping for breath. Brown's Travels.

Pale and faint, He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from him, Demands to see his friends. Addison's Cato.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath; The wolves will get a breakfast by my death. Dryden.

He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death, And with short sobs he gasps away his breath. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by gasping.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and gassed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. Spektator.

GASP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name Is at last gasp. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;

And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shakspere's Henry VI.

If in the dreadful hour of death, If at the latest gasp of breath, When the cold damp bedews your brow, You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison.

To GAST. v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

When he saw my best alarmed spirits, Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,

Or whether gasted by the noise I made, Full suddenly he fled. Shaksp. K. Lear.

GA'STRICK. adj. [from γαστρ.] Belonging to the belly.

GASTRO'GRAPHY. n. f. [γαστρ and γραφω.] In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptance it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine. Sharp's Surgery.

GASTRO'TOMY. n. f. [γαστρ and τομή.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT. The preterit of get. Moses gat him up into the mount. Exodus.

GATE. n. f. [geat, Saxon.]

1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God! My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee. Shakspere.

Gates of monarchs Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through, And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Shaksp. Cymb.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into enclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover? —Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shakspere.

3. An avenue; an opening. Auria had done nothing but wisely and politically, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Kneller's History.

GA'TEVEIN. n. f. The vena porta. Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood. Bacon's Henry VII.

GA'TEWAY. n. f. [gate and way.] A way through gates of enclosed grounds.

Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GATHER. v. a. [gadepan, Saxon.]

1. To collect; to bring into one place. Gather stones—and they took stones and made an heap. Genesis.

2. To get in harvest.

The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Leviticus.

3. To pick up; to glean.

His opinions Have satisfied the king for his divorcee, Gather'd from all the famous colleges. Shakspere's Henry VIII.

Cast up the highway, gather out the stones. Isaiah.

I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer. Wotton.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.

What have I done? To see my youth, my beauty, and my love No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd; And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk, But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside, To wither on the ground! Dryden.

5. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.

6. To heap up; to accumulate.

He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Proverbs.

7. To select and take.

Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Psalms.

8. To sweep together.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. Matthew.

9. To collect charitable contributions.

10. To bring into one body or interest. I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Isaiah.

11. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.

Immortal Tully shone, The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne; Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand, In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand. Pope.

12. To gain.

He gathers ground upon her in the chace; Now breathes upon her hair with nearer pace. Dryden.

13. To pucker needlework.

14. To collect logically; to know by inference.

That which, out of the law of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law. Hooker.

The reason that I gather he is mad, Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner, Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakspere.

After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.

From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the stoicks of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined. Packins.

Return'd, By night, and listening where the hapless pair Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton.

Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is translating Chaucer into French:—from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden.

15. To GATHER Breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky made
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

TO GATHER. v. n.
1. To be condensed; to thicken.
If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear.
Dryden's Pastorals.
When gath'ring clouds o'er shadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh my boys! he cries. Dryden.
When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, east, and west, on airy courses born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn.
Dryden.
Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it.
Addison's Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. To assemble.
There be three things that mine heart feareth;
the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclus.

4. To generate pus or matter.
Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.

GA'THER. n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker;
cloth drawn together in wrinkles.
Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches and the gathers,
Part cannons, perriwigs, and feathers. Hudib.

GA'THERER. n. f. [from gather.]
1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.
I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff.
Wotton's Preface to Elem. of Architecture.
2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.
I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos.
Nor in that land
Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand.
May's Virgil.

GA'THERING. n. f. [from gather.] Collection of charitable contributions.
Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Corinthians.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. f. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks γαυδος; and Mr. Lye finds gaude,
in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gawardio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy;
a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure.
In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.
It is not now much used.
He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shaksp.
The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,

Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. Shaksp. King Lear.
My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shaksp.
Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gaudes the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finest holland bear. Dryden.

TO GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.
Go to a gossip's feast, and gaude with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shaksp.

GA'UDERY. n. f. [from gaude.] Finery;
ostentatious luxury of dress.
The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.
Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South.
A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaud'ry known.
Dryden.

GA'UDILY. adv. [from gaude.] Showily.

GA'UDINESS. n. f. [from gaudy.] Show-iness; tinsel appearance.

GA'UDY. adj. [from gaude.] Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shaksp.
Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sun-beams.
Milton.
A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side.
Dryden.
The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.
A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.
It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity.
Laro.

GA'UDY. n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast;
a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.
He may surely be content with a fast to-day,
that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE. The preterit of give.
Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;
If thou canst give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it.
Donne.

GA'VEL. n. f. A provincial word for ground.
Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mortimer.

GA'VELKIND. n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Corwell.
Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Davies on Ireland.

TO GAUGE. v. a. [gauge, jauge, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written, gage.]
1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.
2. To measure with regard to any proportion.
The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird.
Derham's Physico-Theology.
There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope.

GAUGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A measure,
a standard.
This plate must be a gage to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Moxon.
If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gage of your trade and wealth. Locke.
Timothy proposed to his mistress, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

GAUGER. n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.
Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator.
Carew on Cornwall.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gewant, from gepanian, to lessen, Saxon.] Thin;
slender; lean; meagre.
Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.
Shakspere's Richard II.
Two mastiffs, gaunt and grim, her flight
pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embrau'd.
Dryden's Fables.

GA'UNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly;
slenderly; meagerly.

GA'UNTLET. n. f. [gantlet, French.]
An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleaveland.
Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryd.
Who naked wrestled best, befear'd with oil;
Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil.
Dryden's Fables.
The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light;
View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war. Prior.
So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;

He throws the gauntlet Otway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field.
Southern.

GA'VOT. n. f. [gavotte, French.] A kind of dance.

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, farabands, jigs, and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument. Arbutnot.

GAUZE. n. f. A kind of thin transparent filk.

Silken cloaths were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin, like gauze. Arbutnot.
Brocades and damasks, and tabbies and gauzes, Are lately brought over. Swift.

GAWK. n. f. [geac, Saxon.]

1. A cuckow.
2. A foolish fellow. In both senses it is retained in Scotland.

GAWN. n. f. [corrupted for gallon.] A small tub, or lading vessel. A provincial word.

GA'WNTREE. n. f. [Scottish.] A wooden frame on which beer-casks are set when tunned.

GAY. adj. [gay, French.]

1. Airy; cheerful; merry; frolick.
Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play;
Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay. Pope.
Ev'n rival wits did Voiture's fate deplore,
And the gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before. Pope.

2. Fine; showy.
A virgin that loves to go gay. Baruch.

GAY. n. f. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.
Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gays and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives tales. L'Estrange.

GA'YETY. n. f. [gayeté, French; from gay.]

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment.
2. Acts of juvenile pleasure.
And from those gayeties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denh.
3. Finery; show.
Our gayety and our guilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakspeare's Henry v.

GA'YLY. adv.

1. Merrily; cheerfully; airily.
2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.

The ladies, gayly dress'd, the Mall adorn
With curious dies, and paint the sunny morn. Gay.

Like some fair flow'r, that early spring supplies,
That gayly blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies. Pope.

GA'YNESS. n. f. [from gay.] Gayety; finery. Not much in use.

To GAZE. v. n. [ἀνὰ ὄρα, or rather gerean, to see, Saxon.] To look intently and earnestly; to look with eagerness.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world:
If so, gaze on. Shakspeare's Henry iv.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairf.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Ecclus.
A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shakspeare.

High stations tumults, but not blifs create;
None think the great unhappy, but the great.
Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,
Which makes a swain as wretched as a king. Young.

To GAZE. v. a. To view steadfastly.
Strait toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd a while the ample sky. Milton.

GAZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of musick touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakspeare.

Not a month
'Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now. Shakspeare.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd Worlds. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understanding, soars out of sight, and leave his readers at a gaze. Dryden.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison's Freeholder.

2. The object gazed on.
I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in brazen fetters, under talk,
With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton.

GA'ZEL. n. f. An Arabian deer:

GA'ZER. n. f. [from gaze.] He that gazes; one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermil red did shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;
The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed. Fairy Queen.

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk. Shaks.
Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.
His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed. Watts's Logick.

GA'ZEFUL. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravish'd hearts of gaze'ful men might rear
To admiration of that heavenly light. Spenser.

GA'ZEHOUD. n. f. [gaze and hound; canis agasus, Skinner.] A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

See'st thou the gazehound! how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer!
Tickel.

GA'ZETTE. n. f. [gazetta is a Venetian halfpenny, the price of a newspaper, of which the first was published at Venice.] A paper of news; a paper of publick intelligence. It is accented differently on the first or last syllable.

And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;
Print new additions to their feats,
And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras.

An English gentleman, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of the gazette. Addison's Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;
Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

GAZETTE'ER. n. f. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.
2. An officer appointed to publish news by authority, whom Steele calls the lowest minister of state.

Satire is no more: I feel it die:
No gazetteer more innocent than I. Pope.

GA'ZINGSTOCK. n. f. [gaze and stock.]
A person gazed at with scorn or abhorrence.

These things are offences to us, by making us gazing stocks to others, and objects of their scorn and derision. Ray.

GAZO'N. n. f. [French.] In fortification, pieces of fresh earth covered with grafs, cut in form of a wedge, about a foot long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traverses of galleries. Harris.

GEAR. n. f. [gynian, to clothe; geapne, furniture, Saxon.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements; dress; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear. Fairy Queen.

When he found her bound, stript from her gear,
And vile tormentors ready saw in place,
He broke through. Fairfax.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again. Addison's Guardian.

To see some radiant nymph appear
In all her glitt'ring birthday gear,
You think some goddess from the sky
Descended ready cut and dry. Swift.

2. The traces by which horses or oxen draw.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Ty-deus' son;

His scourge reacht, and his horse made fresh;
then took her angry run

At king Eumelus, brake his gears. Chapman.
The frauds he learn'd in his frantick years
Made him uneasy in his lawful gears. Dryden.

3. Stuff. Hanmer.
If Fortune be a woman, she is a good wench for this gear. Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

the mold. Moxon.

GECK. n. f. [geac, a cuckow; geck, Ger.
a fool; gawke, Scottish.] A bubble easily imposed upon. Hanmer. Obsolete.

Why did you suffer Jachimo to taint his noble heart and brain with needless jealousy, and to become the geck and scorn o' th' other's villainy?
Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention play'd on? Shakspeare.

To GECK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cheat; to trick.

GEE. A term used by waggoners to their horses when they would have them go faster.

2. Noble of mind; magnanimous; open of heart.

A generous virtue of a vigorous kind,
Pure in the last recesses of the mind. Dryden.

That gen'rous boldness to defend
An innocent or absent friend. Swift.

The gen'rous critick fann'd the poet's fire,
And taught the world with reason to admire.

Such was Roscommon, not more learn'd than good,

With manners generous as his noble blood. Pope.

The gen'rous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines. Pope.

His gen'rous spouse, Theano, heav'nly fair,
Nurs'd the young stranger with a mother's care.

Pray for others in such forms, with such length, importunity, and earnestness, as you use for yourself; and you will find all little ill-natured passions die away, your heart grow great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others, as you used only to delight in your own.

3. It is used of animals. Spritely; daring; courageous.

So the imperial eagle does not stay
Till the whole carcase he devour,
As if his gen'rous hunger understood
That he can never want plenty of food,
He only sucks the tasteful blood. Cowley.

His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries:
A gen'rous pack. Addison.

4. Liberal; munificent.

When from his vest the young companion bore
The cup the gen'rous landlord own'd before,
And paid profusely with the precious bowl,
The stinted kindness of this churlish soul. Parnel.

Fast by the margin of her native flood,
Whose wealthy waters are well known to fame,
Fair as the bordering flowers the princess stood,
And rich in bounty as the gen'rous stream. Heigh.

5. Strong; vigorous.

Having in a digestive furnace drawn off the ardent spirit from some good sack, the phlegm, even in this generous wine, was copious. Boyle.

Those who in southern climes complain,
From Phœbus' rays they suffer pain,
Must own that pain is well repaid,
By gen'rous wines beneath a shade. Swift.

Her gentlewomen, like the nereids,
So many mermaids, tended her i' th' eyes,
And made their bends adorings. Shakspeare.

3. A word of civility or irony.

Now, gentlewoman, you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical down-cast look. Dryden.

GENTLY. adv. [from gentle.]

1. Softly; meekly; tenderly; inoffensively; kindly.

My mistress gently chides the fault I made. Dryden.

The mischiefs that come by inadvertency, or ignorance, are but very gently to be taken notice of. Locke.

2. Softly; without violence.

Fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gently warded, craves
A noble cunning. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

A sort of great bat, as men lay asleep with their legs naked, will suck their blood at a wound so gently made as not to awake them.

Grew's Musæum.

GENTRY. n. f. [gentlery, gentry, from gentle.]

1. Birth; condition; rank derived from inheritance.

You are certainly a gentleman,
Clerk-like, experienc'd, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parent's noble name,
In whose success we are gentle. Shakspeare.

2. Class of people above the vulgar; those between the vulgar and the nobility.

They slaughtered many of the gentry, for whom no sex or age could be accepted for excuse. Sidney.

Let states, that aim at greatness, take heed
how their nobility and gentry multiply too fast.

Bacon's Ornament. Ration.

How cheerfully the hawkers cry

A satyr, and the gentry buy. Swift.

3. A term of civility real or ironical.

The many-colour'd gentry there above,
By turns are rul'd by tumult and by love. Prior.

4. Civility; complaisance. Obsolete.

Shew us so much gentry and good-will,
As to extend your time with us a-while. Shakspeare.

GENUFLECTION. n. f. [genuflexion, Fr. genu and flecto, Latin.] The act of bending the knee; adoration expressed by bending the knee.

Here use all the rites of adoration, genuflexions, wax candles, incense, oblations, prayers only excepted. Stillingfleet.

GENUINE. adj. [genuinus, Latin.] Not spurious; not counterfeit; real; natural; true.

Experiments were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Boyle.

The belief and remembrance, and love and fear of God, have so great influence to make men religious, that where any of these is, the rest, together with the true and genuine effects of them, are supposed to be. Tillotson.

A sudden darkness covers all;

True genuine night: night added to the groves. Dryden.

GENUINELY. adv. [from genuine.] Without adulteration; without foreign admixtures; naturally.

There is another agent able to analyze compound bodies less violently, more genuinely, and more universally than the fire. Boyle.

GENUINENESS. n. f. [from genuine.] Freedom from any thing counterfeit; freedom from adulteration; purity; natural state.

It is not essential to the genuineness of colours to be durable. Boyle.

GENUS. n. f. [Latin.] In science, a class of being, comprehending under it many species: as quadruped is a genus comprehending under it almost all terrestrial beasts.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures: so animal is a genus, because it agrees to horse, lion, whale, and butterfly. Watts' Logick.

If minerals are not convertible into another species, though of the same genus, much less can they be surmised reducible into a species of another genus. Harvey on Consumptions.

GEOCENTRICK. adj. [γῆ and κέντρον; geocentrique, French.] Applied to a planet or orb having the earth for its centre, or the same centre with the earth.

Harris.

GEODESIA. n. f. [γεωδαισία; geodesie, French.] That part of geometry which contains the doctrine or art of measuring surfaces, and finding the contents of all plane figures. Harris.

VOL. I.

GEODE'TICAL. adj. [from geodesia.] Relating to the art of measuring surfaces; comprehending or showing the art of measuring land.

GEOGRAPHER. n. f. [γῆ and γράφω; geographe, French.] One who describes the earth according to the position of its different parts.

A greater part of the earth hath ever been peopled than hath been known or described by geographers. Brown.

The bay of Naples is called the Crater by the old geographers. Addison.

From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a meer geographer by love. Tickel.

GEOGRAPHICAL. adj. [geographique, Fr. from geography.] Relating to geography; belonging to geography.

GEOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from geographical.] In a geographical manner; according to the rules of geography.

Minerva lets Ulysses into the knowledge of his country; she geographically describes it to him. Broome on the Odyssey.

GEOGRAPHY. n. f. [γῆ and γράφω; geographie, French.] Geography, in a strict sense, signifies the knowledge of the circles of the earthly globe, and the situation of the various parts of the earth. When it is taken in a little larger sense, it includes the knowledge of the seas also; and in the largest sense of all, it extends to the various customs, habits, and governments of nations. Watts.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven; but geography makes slight account hereof, when they discourse of Andes or Teneriff. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

According to ancient fables the Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatick, carrying their ships upon their shoulders: a mark of great ignorance in geography. Arbutnot.

GEOLOGY. n. f. [γῆ and λόγος.] The doctrine of the earth; the knowledge of the state and nature of the earth.

GEO'MANCER. n. f. [γῆ and μάντις.] A fortuneteller; a caster of figures; a cheat who pretends to foretel futurity by other means than the astrologer.

Fortunetellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude the vulgar. Brown.

GEO'MANCY. n. f. [γῆ and μαντία; geomance, French.] The act of casting figures; the act of foretelling by figures what shall happen.

According to some there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe.

GEO'MANTICK. adj. [from geomancy.] Pertaining to the act of casting figures.

Two geomantick figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid;
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden.

GEO'METER. n. f. [γεωμέτρης; geometre, French.] One skilled in geometry; a geometrician.

He became one of the chief geometers of his age. Watts.

GEO'METRAL. adj. [geometral, French; from geometry.] Pertaining to geometry.

DiD.

GEOMETRICAL. adj. [γεωμετρικός; geometrique, Fr. from geometry.]

1. Pertaining to geometry.

A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discerned by reason. More.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles doth teach to contrive several powers. Wilkins.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.

Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd the height and bigness of Hercules by his foot. Stillingfleet.

Does not this wise philosopher assert,
That the vast orb, which casts so fair his beams,
Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?
That the dimensions of his glorious face

Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass? Blackm.

3. Disposed according to geometry.

Geometrick jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cruciformis. Grew.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometrical.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Wilkins.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanicks. Ray.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. f. [γεωμέτρης.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. Brown.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles!

Watts on the Mind.

TO GEO'METRIZE. v. a. [γεωμετρέω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometrize. Boyle.

GEO'METRY. n. f. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, French.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice. Harris.

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray on the Creation.

Him also for my censor I disdain,
Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;
Who counts geometry and numbers toys,
And with his foot the sacred dust destroys.

Dryden's Persius.

GEOPO'NICAL. adj. [γῆ and πόνος; geoponique, French.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geoponical, or such as have treated de re rustica. Brown.

GE'RMAN. n. f. [germain, French; germanus, Latin.] Brother; one approaching to a brother in proximity of blood: thus the children of brothers or sisters are called cousins german, the only sense in which the word is now used.

They knew it was their cousin german, the famous Amphialus. Sidney.

And to him said, go now, proud miscreant,
Thyself thy message do to german dear. Fairy Q.

Wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be kill'd by the horse; wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be seiz'd by the leopard; wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were juries on thy life. Shakspeare.

You'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have courfers for cousins, and genets for germans. Shakspeare's Othello.

GE'RMAN, adj. [germanus, Latin.] Related. Obsolete.

Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are german to him, though removed fifty times, shall come under the hangman. Shakspeare.

GE'RMANDER. n. f. [germandrée, French; chamædrys, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

GERME. n. f. [germen, Latin.] A sprout or shoot; that part which grows and spreads.

Whether it be not made out of the germe, or treadle of the egg, doth seem of lesser doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GE'RMIN. n. f. [germen, Latin.] A shooting or sprouting seed. Out of use.

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure

Of nature's germins tumble all together,
Even 'till destruction sicken; answer me
To what I ask you. Shakspeare's Macb.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world;
Crack nature's mould; all germins spill at once
That make ungrateful man. Shakspeare.

TO GE'RMINATE. v. n. [germino, Lat.] To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcites, which hath within a spirit that will put forth and germinate, as we see in chymical trials. Bacon.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amongst matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth. Woodw.

GERMINATION. n. f. [germination, Fr. from germinate.] The act of sprouting or shooting; growth.

For acceleration of germination, we shall handle the subject of plants generally. Bacon.

The duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned among the sponte nascentes. Wotton.

There is but little similitude between a terreous humidity and plantal germinations. Glanville.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; there the whole globe would be one frigid zone; there would be no life, no germination. Bentley's Sermons.

GE'RUND. n. f. [gerundium, Latin.] In the Latin grammar, a kind of verbal noun, which governs cases like a verb.

GEST. n. f. [gestum, Latin.]

Gests should be interlarded after the Persian manner, by ages, young and old.

3. The roll or journal of the several days, and stages prefixed, in the progresses of our kings, many of them being still extant in the herald's office. [from giste, or gite, French.] Hanmer.

I'll give you my commission,
To let him there a month, behind the gest, Prefix'd for's parting. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

4. A stage; so much of a journey as passes without interruption. In all senses obsolete.

He distinctly sets down the gests and progress thereof. Brown.

GESTA'TION. n. f. [gestatio, Lat.] The act of bearing the young in the womb.

Aristotle affirmeth the birth of the infant, or time of its gestation, extendeth sometimes unto the eleventh month; but Hippocrates avers that it exceedeth not the tenth. Brown.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestation, should the nourishment be carried to the embryo in the womb, which at other times goeth not that way? Ray on the Creation.

TO GESTICULATE. v. n. [gesticular, Latin; gesticuler, French.] To play antick tricks; to show postures. Diſ.

GESTICULATION. n. f. [gesticulatio, Latin; gesticulation, French; from gesticulate.] Antick tricks; various postures.

GE'STURE. n. f. [gero, gestum, Latin; geste, French.]

1. Action or posture expressive of sentiment.
Ah, my sister, if you had heard his words, or seen his gestures, when he made me know what and to whom his love was, you would have matched in yourself those two rarely matched together, pity and delight. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

To the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakspeare.

Humble and reverend gestures in our approaches to God express the inward reverence of our souls. Duty of Man.

2. Movement of the body.

Grace was in all her steps, heav'n in her eye,
In ev'ry gesture dignity and love! Milton.

Every one will agree in this, that we ought either to lay aside all kinds of gesture, or at least to make use of such only as are graceful and expressive. Addison's Spectator.

TO GE'STURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To accompany with action or posture.

Our attire disgraceth it; it is not orderly read, nor gestured as becometh. Hooker.

He undertook so to gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was, that none should discern him. Wotton.

We have here a gilder, with his anvil and hammer. Broome.

2. A coin, from one shilling and six-pence to two shillings.

I am bound To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shakspeare.

GI'LDING. n. f. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.

Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon.

The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.

Could laureate Dryden pimp and fry'r engage, And I not not strip the gilding off a knave, Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.

GILL. n. f. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Lat.]

1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.

The leviathan, Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims, And seems a moving land, and at his gills Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton.

Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills. Ray.

He hath two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but before them. Walton.

'Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left.
King's Fisherman.

2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.

The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. The flesh under the chin.

In many there is no paleness at all; but contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon's Natural History.

Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.

4. [gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint, or, in some places, half of a pint.

Every bottle must be rinsed with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rinse a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.

5. A kind of measure among the tanners.

They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint. Carew.

6. [from Gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.

I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill;
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.

7. [chelonium.] A plant; ground-ivy.

8. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.

In sense four, and all following, it is spoken jill.

GILLHOUSE. n. f. [gill and house.] A house where gill is sold.

Thou shalt each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,

And answer ginshops sorer sighs return. Pope.

GILLYFLOWER. n. f. [either corrupted from July flower, or from giroflée, Fr.]

Gillyflowers or rather Julyflowers, so called from the month they blow in, may be reduced to these sorts; red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white. Mortimer's Husbandry.

In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon.

Pair is the gillyflower of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet. Gay.

GILT. n. f. [from gild.] Golden show; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Obsolete.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shaksp.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. Shakspere's Timon of Athens.

GILT. The participle of gild.

Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way. Pope.

GILTHEAD. n. f. [gilt and head.]

1. A sea fish.

He blended together the livers of giltheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phenicopters, and the melts of lampres. Hakewill.

GILT-TAIL. n. f. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM. adj. [an old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.

GIMCRACK. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.

For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,

The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cros his grounds? Arbuthnot's John Bull.

GIMLET. n. f. [gibélet, guimbelet, French.]

A borer with a screw at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Moxon.

GIMMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gimellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical.

Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hanmer.

I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magick. More's Divine Dialogues.

GIMP. n. f. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. f. [from engine.]

1. A trap; a snare.

As the day begins,

With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pastime make. Sidney.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Hath slain Sir Mordant. Spenser.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net. Shakspeare.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty. Shakspeare.

If those, who have but sense, can shun
The engines that have them annoy'd;
Little for me had reason done,
If I could not thy gins avoid. Ben Jonson's Forest.

I know thy trains,
Though dearly to my cost; thy gins and toils
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.

He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without th' expence of cheese and bacon. Hudibras.

Keep from slaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras.

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.

Typhæus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spenser.

3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.

The delfs would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or foughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water driveling on the outside of the gin pump of Moltyn coalpits. Woodward.

4. [contracted from GENEVA.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper-berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.

Gin shops sorer sighs return, Pope.

GINGER. n. f. [zinziber, Latin; gíngero, Italian.]

The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromack, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves. Hill's Materia Medica.

Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope.

GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.]

A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some aromack seeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakspeare.

Her currants there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cookery.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.

GINGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.

What is 't that you Took up so gingerly? Shakspeare.

GINGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Diſt.

GINGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlude appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of periousness. Holder's Elements of Speech.

TO GINGLE. v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket ginglyng halfpence found. Gay.

Once, we confels, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And ginglyng down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

TO GINGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

2. Affectation in the sound of periods.

GINGLYMOID. adj. [γινγλυμοῖς, a hinge, and ἰδῶς.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Holder.

GINGLYMUS. n. f. A mutual indenting of two bones into each others cavity, in the manner of a hinge, of which the elbow is an instance. Wiseman.

GINNET. n. f. [γίνος.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.

GINSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

To GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GIPSY. n. f. [corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps, truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.

A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts, And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants. Prior.

In this still labyrinth around her lie Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;

A figil in his hand the gipsy bears, In th' other a prophetick sieve and sheers. Garth.

I, near yon stile, three fallow gypsies met; Upon my hand they cast a poring look, Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to her lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakspeare.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes: The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

GIRASOLE. n. f. [girafol, French.]

1. The herb turnsol.

2. The opal stone.

To GIRD. v. a. pret. girded or girt. [gynban, Saxon.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Maccabees.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Swift.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac. My bow and thunder, my almighty arms Girt on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milton.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords, And, at the head of our remaining troops, Attack the foe. Addison's Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines, When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot; And in reguerdon of that duty done, I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakspeare's Henry vi

The son appear'd, Girt with omnipotence. Milton's Par. Lost.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk. Ezekiel.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together sow'd,

To gird their waist: vain covering, if it hide Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton.

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton.

8. To enclose; to encircle.

That Nyseian isle, Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham Hid Amalthea, and her florid son Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milton.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the god. Shakspeare.

To GIRD. v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original; it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gride or cut.] To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

This wondrous error growth At which our criticks gird. Drayton.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakspeare.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang: it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird: For shame, my lord of Winchester relent. Shaks.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheists feels. Tillotson.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman.

GIRDER. n. f. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind, These ribs robust and vast in order join'd. Black.

GIRDLE. n. f. [gynbe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

There will I make thee beds of roses, With a thousand fragrant posies; A cap of flowers, and a girdle, Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakspeare.

GIRT. } n. f. [from gird.]

GIRTH. } 1. A band by which the saddle or burden is fixed upon the horse.

Here lies old Hobson, death hath broke his girth And here, alas! hath laid him in the dirt. Milton.

Or the saddle turn'd round, or the girths brake;
For low on the ground, woe for his sake,
The law is found. Ben Jonson.
Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;
The steed oppress'd would break his girth,
To raise the lumber from the earth. Swift.
Mordanto gallops on alone;
The roads are with his foll'wers strown;
This breaks a girth and that a bone. Swift.

2. A circular bandage.

The most common way of bandage is by that of the girt, which girt hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are tacked firmly together.

Wifeman's Surgery.

3. The compass measured by the girdle, or enclosing bandage.

He's a lusty jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth. Addison's Frecholder.

To GIRTH. v. a. To bind with a girth.

To GISE Ground. v. a. Is when the owner of it does not feed it with his own stock, but takes in other cattle to graze.

Bailey.

GISLE. Among the English Saxons, signifies a pledge: thus, Fredgisle is a pledge of peace; Gislebert an illustrious pledge, like the Greek Homerus.

Gibf. Camden.
